I would like express my deepest gratitude to my guide, friend and mentor Dr. Arpita Gopal whose wise advice and constructive criticism was the guiding factor behind this work. She would make me realize the alternatives with her precise and to the point arguments. My heartfelt thanks go to my fellow research scholars and friends, Chandrani Singh, Netra Patil, Anagha Vaidya, Sonali Patil, whose support and ‘push’ kept me on track. Exchange of ideas and animated discussions on totally unrelated topics of our respective research fields helped me think out of the box, which is a key ingredient for any investigative endeavour.

I am indebted to Dr. Vilas Kharat, head, Department of Computer Science, University of Pune, who always has a positive attitude towards academic and research endeavours and provided me with ample opportunities to work and explore His academic leadership, enevolence and quest for excellence have always been a source of inspiration.

I am beholden to my colleague and friend, Mr. Achyut Roy, who had always been more than willing to help me. Whenever I would feel down and stuck, he would pitch in with his wide repertoire of experience and wise words. I am deeply grateful to my husband Mr. Deepak Korpal for constantly edging me on to go on and sharing the household responsibilities with me to let me have time to focus on my work. My kids, Pranav and Pragya, who always were enthusiastic to know when and where is my paper being published and always giving me incentives to work. Thanks.

Last but definitely not the least, my mother and my brother, whose blessings are always there whenever I take up something, had been instrumental in many ways. My brother’s technical bent of mind and problem solving skills always help me think in the right direction whenever I feel lost. My mother’s relentless efforts in helping us to shape our futures while growing up and now when we are grown ups, is a big source of inspiration for me. Thank you.
