ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I should like to place on record my deep sense of gratitude to Dr. Mahmood Alam Raz, Professor of Economics, Aligarh Muslim University, for his guidance and supervision. Without his constant help and encouragement this study would probably never have been completed. He has been a true friend and guide right from my association with him as a research scholar. His advice, help and guidance have always been available to me without any grudge. I shall always remain grateful to him.

I am also grateful to Professor Mohammed Shabbir Khan, Head of the Department of Economics for his gracious advice and help from time to time.

I owe my gratitude to other Professors of the Department also, especially Dr. A. Wahab who willingly offered his advice and helped me at various stages of writing my dissertation.

I am thankful to the Library of Indian Institute of Foreign Trade at New Delhi for enabling me to pursue my studies there. Thanks are also due to Nepalese Embassy in India, Indian Cooperation Mission, Kathmandu, Trade Promotion Centre, Kathmandu, Central Bureau of Statistics,
Kathmandu, Ministry of External Affairs for the guidance and obtaining certain important data and materials.

The Library staff at the Economics Seminar Library and Office staff in the Economics Department of the University extended their help and cooperation, whenever needed. To all of them, I feel obliged.

Finally, I acknowledge my thanks to Zahoor Ahmad who efficiently typed the dissertation.

Aligarh.

March 15, 1982

CHANDAN KUMAR