Socio-economic, political and geographical factors determine the labour market of an economy. The specific features which emerge are reflected in demand and supply of labour, wage determination, discrimination in labour market, public versus private sector wage differentials, feminization of labour market, wages and inflation, labour market and distribution of income, poverty and unemployment etc. All these are theorized and empirically analysed as the management of human resources concerns both developing and developed economies.

Being a Jordanian and a student of Economics, I used to think about the theoretical constructs within which Jordan's labour market could be studied. The geopolitical factors of Jordan are so unique that the labour market is subject to normal disequilibrium and jolts which dislocate the economy. This element of unexpected emergence of crisis in the backdrop of unfavourable geographical condition and backward agriculture and industrial sectors often leave Jordanian economy paralysed for fairly long periods of time.

The indigenous and exogenous economic factors lead to outmigration of labour and political factors result in sudden returns of Jordanians as well as refugees. Jordan needs immigrant/guest labourers for agriculture and construction activities which Jordanians do not prefer to have. Such simultaneous outflow and inflow of labour is a unique feature of Jordanian labour market. The concentration of economic activities in a limited geographical area is special to Jordan. This has resulted in its being an urbanized service-based economy. Since the commodity producing sectors are backward and the economy is dependant upon service sectors the growth process becomes doubtful. It was therefore necessary to study the labour market and out and in migration of labour and the unemployment problems in Jordan. It was essential to focus on unemployment because the issue is sensitive and has implications on other aspects of the labour market. Since outmigration is both a consequence and a solution of unemployment and the inflow of labour is a mixed blessing, it was felt that interplay of all these forces should be analysed. The present work is an attempt in this direction. It means to fill the gap in the existing literature on labour market studies of Jordan as it is comprehensive in its treatment of the issue. It updates the labour market scenario of Jordan as information after 1989 is scanty and attempts to examine the efficacy of the existing economic theory to analyse the labour market of Jordan.

In this endeavour, I was helped by many individuals and researchers. It is my duty to express my gratitude to them for their support and encouragement to me.

I am indebted to my guide Dr. (Mrs) Arti U. Nanavati, who directed me to locate the relevant data-base and research-design, and also supervised my work, examining, correcting and improving the drafts of manuscripts. I owe immensely to her graciousness... and sense of meticulous perfection. This enabled me to learn the techniques of data-processing. Because of her insistence, the subject of labour market has been treated thoroughly with quantitative techniques, rather than vague descriptive accounts of the facts. She gave me fresh analytical outlook and perspective to complete my project.

I used to meet the Head, Department of Economics, M.S. University, Dr. Maya Shah to discuss my work and to report on its progress. Dr. Shah gave valuable suggestions and encouraged me. I thank her for the same. Dr. V.N. Kothari, the Retired Head of the Economics Department helped me framing the questionnaires and gave me tips for conducting interviews. Without his help, my primary data collection and processing would have been problematic.

I did my graduation and post-graduation in Economics from Fergusson College, Pune. In Pune, I used the library of Gokhale Institute of Economics and Politics extensively. I thank its staff for the help. I obtained sizeable help from the veteran researcher Prof. Gandhi, Head of the Economics Department, Fergusson College, Pune. I sought help from Prof. P.S. Sardesai, retired faculty member of Gokhale Institute. Shri Vilas Ekbote, my teacher was a permanent source of encouragement. I express my heart felt gratitude for all of them.

I am grateful to the following institutions, and personnel for providing me with all the necessary information: i) The staff of Servants of India Society’s Library, ii) Jordanian

I could not have done my doctorate without financial support. My elder brother, Alghazou Abdullah supported this venture. I express my respect and gratitude for him though no verbal statement would suffice.

My dear friends Mr. Mwafaq Alkhaldi and Dr. Hussan Kasasbeh, stood by me during periods of anxiety in my research, I thank them for their support.

I am thankful to Indian citizens, the Indian academics, and various sorts of people who have obliged me in a number of ways and have made my stay and career-building in India happy and fruitful.

I shall never forget India. I owe my education and growth to the cities of Pune and Vadodara.

My doctorate from India will always remain itched in my memory.

BARODA,
