I owe a debt of gratitude to many persons and institutions that have encouraged and helped me in my research. Professor Hyatt H. Waggoner and Professor Mark Spilka, of Brown University, introduced me to the poetry of Emerson and Whitman, and gave me valuable insights. I thank them for their guidance in my work.

My involvement in American Studies was greatly reinforced by the various facilities offered me by the American Studies Research Centre, Hyderabad. Its library has been immensely helpful, and the administrative staff very co-operative, courteous and prompt in their services. Professor Isaac Sequeira of Osmania University, and Dr. J.N. Sharma of the ASRC guided me during the initial stages of my encounter with Roethke. I am thankful to them for their help and interest in my research.

In 1977, Professor V.Y. Kantak, formerly Head of the Department of English, M.S. University of Baroda, came back as Professor under the U.G.C. Scheme. It was he who gave a direction to my reading of Roethke's poetry, discussed all his major poems and helped formulate my approach to the subject. I am deeply indebted to him for his sympathetic and sustained interest in my work.

I am also grateful to Professor R.N. Mehta who kindly accepted the responsibility of supervising my research after Professor Kantak formally ceased to be associated with my project. Professor Mehta has spared no pains to give some design to my rough drafts, and his close reading of my text has been extremely beneficial.

I wish to thank Dr. Birje - Patil also who discussed some of Yeats's poems with me. He has always evinced a friendly interest in my research.

Dr. C.K. Seshadri, Dr. R.K. Raval and Mr. S.K. Rana, my colleagues in the department, have always been willing to help me whenever I sought their assistance.

Finally, I thank Professor J.O. Barnhill of Brown University for his kindness which no words of gratitude can repay.

I appreciate the prompt services of Mr. K.A. Patel, who typed out the manuscript with great care.
