This Research is dedicated to...

My (late) parents, Mangala and Vasudev Kulkarni – had they not ignited the hunger for knowledge in my mind, I would not have reached this far. I am indebted to them for instilling in me the confidence to question and for exemplifying that perseverance is the only way to true success.

My parents-in-law, Shaila Bhangaokar and Shridhar Bhangaokar – without their generous, consistent and unquestioning support, this doctoral work would have remained a dream.

My friend and husband, Ashish – His involvement at the home front and in every step of this research, wiped out many barriers even before they could arise. I could sail through many ups and downs due to his constant companionship, encouragement and good humor.

My son, Tathastu for being very accommodating and patient, even during prolonged periods of absence.

My friend Ajay and his mother, Mrs. Asha Agashe for being genuinely concerned about my progress and above all, for providing the most appropriate conditions in their home for writing this dissertation.

To my brother, Shashank, who called me every single day from wherever he was, without fail, to know how my work was progressing. Thanks are also due for lending the SPSS package and learner manual.

To my brother-in-law, Manish and his wife Isha for taking care of the home scene and being so supportive. I specially thank Manish dada for providing infinite number of print outs, sometimes at short notice, all through the research process.

Last but not the least, my niece, Sakshi for so innocently asking the most relevant question ....“kaka, when will you finish your homework?”.
