CHAPTER III

SOCIAL STRUCTURE

Introduction

In any cultural study, the socio-psychological life of people plays the most important part; therefore, a study of society includes the study of man, the mode of his behaviour, the beliefs and superstitions, the customs and ideals, the position of women, the moral aspects and the behaviour patterns.

The caste system of India constitutes the social structure of Hinduism and the whole social relationship can be studied by a study of the caste-system which forms the core of stability, which orders the society essentially according to the function of different groups and which order is traditional, sacred and therefore presumptively changeless.¹

¹ Oliver Cromwell Cox, Caste, Class and Race.
Various attempts have been made to define the caste but the scholars have found it difficult to define it in its entirety. Dr. Ghurye remarks that inspite of the efforts of all the students of caste system we do not possess a real general definition of caste and it appears that any attempt at definition is bound to fail because of the complexity of the phenomenon. He notes the outstanding features of Hindu society as follows: (i) Segmental division of society, (ii) hierarchy with Brahmins at the apex, (iii) Restrictions on feeding and social intercourse (iv) Civil and religious disabilities and privileges of the different sections, (v) lack of choice of occupation, (vi) restrictions on marriage.

Varna, Jāti and Caste

Before discussing the theory of the origin of the four varṇas, it is necessary to deal with the concepts of varṇa and jāti. Varna originally meant colour but as social term it meant order or class. Its origin can be traced to the Vedas. In the Puruṣasūktahymn (Rv.10) a picture of creation is given in which the parts of the great god from

---

2 For various definitions of caste, vide Dutt N.K., Origin and growth of caste in India, Vol.1, Ch.1.
3 Ghurye, G.S., Caste and Class in India, P.1. which the Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra emanated are given. This Vedic theory was taken as a sanction for the permanent classification of society on a fourfold basis of Manu and other lawgivers and was rigidly followed by society.
The varṇas were really the classifications of worldly occupation of man which are necessary for the well-being of society.
Teachers and priests were called Brahmans, rulers and administrators kṣatriyas; farmers, merchants and bankers, vaiśyas, and artisans and labourers śūdras. These vocations were followed by people according to their ability and status. But they according to varṇa theory were not confined to any group of persons. Merit or liking alone entitled a man to follow a particular profession. Bhagavadgītā emphasized this interpretation of the varṇa-theory. To each varṇa or principal occupation a number of groups of persons or jātis came later to attach themselves, considering the following of any other occupation as prohibited or degraded work. This led to the subsequent identification of varṇa with certain jātis and not with others, though originally it was not so. This disappearance —ance of varṇa theory based on the colour or kind of work or its merging into the jāti theory based on birth and boycott created the foundation of the Hinduism which is rigid in its social institutions and customs.
Thus the varna theory of society is not to be confused with the jati system forming to-day the bed-rock of Hindu society and which is generally described by the term caste system. The word caste was first used by the Portuguese to denote the various jatis existing in India.\(^5\) The word 'Jati' originates from the Sanskrit word 'Jan' to take birth, while the word 'varna' means colour. Varna also originates from 'Vra' 'to choose' meaning 'choice of vocation' but either way, it has nothing to do with the purely hereditary principle involved in the word 'Jati'.\(^6\) The view that 'varna' and 'Jati' are distinct and 'essentially independent', though by the reaction of principles on fact the two institutions may have become fused together later on was put forward by E. Senart\(^7\) and this is now the generally accepted opinion.

MM. Dr. P. V. Kane points out that the word Jati in the sense of caste can be traced back at least to the time of Nirukta and that it hardly occurs in the sense of caste in the Vedic literature.\(^8\) The word jati implies the 'heredity connotation' while the word 'varna' implies the 'colour connotation', which was so strong that "when the classes came to be regularly

---

\(^6\) Prabhu P. N., Hindu Social Organization, P. 304.

\(^7\) Senart: Caste in India (Tr. by Ross, 1930), P. 153.

described as varnas, four different colours were assigned to the four classes by which their members were supposed to be distinguished."9

The Br. P. uses the terms 'varna', 'Jāti' and 'Jñāti' to mean the 'social order'. There is a reference to the ascription of the four colours to the four varnas when the Br. P. states that in the Sāmalavīpa, the Brahmans were Kapila, the kṣatriyas Aruna, the vaiśyas Pīta or Yellow and the Šūdras black.10 Again it is said that in the Nāmraka-kāśtra people of the varnas having white, yellow, red and black colours lived.11

Theory of the origin of the four social orders

Various theories have been propounded by the scholars regarding the origin of the caste-system.12 According to the Indian tradition13 the oldest reference about the 10 20.30; The Muh.(Cr.ed. 12.131.5) states that the colour of the Brahmān is white, of the kṣatriyas red, of the vaiśyas yellow and of the Šūdras black.

11 41.17, missing in 'ga'.
12 Nesfield's occupational theory - 'A brief review of the caste system of the north-west provinces and Cuddh(1885), Risley's Racial theory 'Tribes and Castes of Bengal' 1891 and people of India, 2nd ed.1915; Hutton J.L., Caste in India, PP. 118 ff.
13 Colebrooke: Miscellaneous Essays, 1, P.309 note, MaxMüller Ancient Sanskrit literature, P.370.
origin of the four varṇas is found in the Puruṣasūkta (Rv,10.90.12) which is regarded as one of the late hymns. It states 'The Brahmaṇa was his mouth, his arms were made into the Rājanya, his thighs were the Vaiśya, from his feet the sūdra was born,'\(^{14}\) and the same account is repeated in later works with slight modifications.

The Br. P. also assigns the origin of the four varṇas to the different limbs of lord Nārāyaṇa and accepts the theory of the four varṇas as enunciated in the Puruṣa­sūkta with the difference that 'Puruṣa' of the 'Puruṣasūkta' is transformed into 'Nārāyaṇa' in the Brahma purāṇa and the term 'Rājanya' of the RV. is transformed into 'ksatrá' in the Br. P.\(^{15}\) Again it is actually stated that lord Brahmana recited the Puruṣasūkta and Brahmans were created from his mouth, ksatriyas from his arms, the Vaiśyas from his thighs and the sūdras from his feet.\(^{16}\)

This passage has been allegorically interpreted to \(^{14}\) Brown Norman W, JAOS 51, 108-118.

\(^{15}\) Brahma Vaktram Bhujau Kṣatram Uru me Samśritā viśeḥ Pādeu sūdra Bhavantīme Vikramaṇa krameṇa ca = 56.22,23.

\(^{16}\) Brāhmaṇastu mukhāttasayābhavenbāhosa' ka Kṣatriyāṁ urubhyam viṣa eva ca - Pādhvyāṁ sūdrasāca samjātaḥ. 161. 45,46-48.
imply a scheme of social stratification based on the principle of division of work, thus the brahmins who emanated from the mouth were to play the role of the preservers and the propagators of learning and instructors to humanity at large. The ksatriyas who sprang from arms, the symbol of strength and valour were duty-bound to protect the people. The creation of the vaisyas from the thighs signifies that he was to provide all the means of sustenance to the society while the südra who originated from the foot symbolised the fact that he was to serve the other three varṇas.17 "The whole social organisation is here conceived symbolically as one human being - the Body social - we may say with the limbs representing the social classes based on the principle of division of labour."18

The system of the four varṇas had taken such deep roots in the period when the Brāhmaṇa works were composed, that there are many vedic passages saying that it extended even to the gods,19 Agni and Brhaspati being the Brāhmaṇas among gods, Indra, Varuṇa, Soma, Yama being the ksatriyas, Vasus, Rudras, the Visve Devas and Maruts being the Viś, and 19 Kane P.V., HDS, Vol. II, P.42.

Pūṣan being the sūdra. The Br. P. also states that there were four varṇas among the gods and the members of all the four varṇas used to dine together (34.36). This means that the restrictions regarding food were not observed among the gods. Elsewhere lord Mahādeva is described as the progenitor of the four varṇas (40.66) and the ascriber of the dharmas to different varṇas (40.34).

The Br. P. further describes the varṇa system in the various dvīpas. Thus it states that from Plakṣadvīpa to Sākadvīpa, the dharma is divided into four parts according to the arrangement of varṇa and Āstāna (20.16). The Br. P. delineates the different names given to the four classes of the social ladder in the various dvīpas. Thus the four classes of the Plakṣadvīpa are called Āryakas, Kuravas, Viviśvas and Bhāvinas (20.17). The classes of the Sālmaladvīpa having different colours have already been noted. The four varṇas of the Kuṣadvīpa are Damins, Śuṣmins, Shehas and Māndahas (20.39). The four varṇas of the Krauñcadvīpa are Puṣkalas, Puṣkaras, Dhanyas and Khyātas (20.53), and those of the Sākadvīpa are Magas, Magadhas, Mānasas and Mandagas (20.71) and in the Puṣkaradvīpa, the system of varṇa does not prevail (20.85).

20 Maitrāyanī Sam 1.10.13, Satapatha 14.4.2. 23-25, Br. Up. 1.4.11-13, Kauśitaki Br.9.5 & Ait. Br.34.5, Sātiparva 208.22-25.
Elsewhere Lord Brahma is described as the progenitor of the four varnas (223.3).

The Br.P. at one place mentions the duties that are common to all the four classes. Thus it states that to hoard money for the maintenance of the servants, to approach one's wife at the appropriate time, to show kindness to all, to bear the duals of Sita and Usha, to remain holy and unaggressive, not to inflict pain on others, to speak sweetly to keep friendly feeling towards all, not to wish for anything and not to find faults with others - these are the highest and common duties for all the castes.21

Various types of theories regarding the origin and development of the four social orders seem to be found in the Epics and the Dharmaśāstra literature and the current of this theorising activity is noticed in the Br. P. also when it states that the children belonging to one person were divided into various classes. Thus the descendants of king Gṛṣṇamāda (13.64), King Kavyapa (11.61) and the sage Angrāsa (13.79) belonged to the four different social orders.

21 222,13-17; vide also Mbh. Anu. 141,51-79.
The most remarkable feature in the mechanism of the Hindu society is the high position occupied in it by the Brahmins. They not only claim the almost divine honours as their birthright, but generally speaking, the other three classes readily submit to authority as a matter of course. The superiority of one caste over the other does not necessarily mean domination of one caste by the other. Once established it becomes a situation of mutual expectation and willing, almost happy, yielding of definite privileges and deference. The relationship is spontaneous. As Dubois observes, "The Brahmin's superiority is inherent in himself, and it remains in fact, no matter what his condition in life may be. Rich or Poor, unfortunate or prosperous, he always goes on the principle engraved in him that he is the most noble, the most excellent, and the most perfect of all created beings, that all the rest of mankind is infinitely beneath him, and that there is nothing in the world so sublime or so admirable as his customs and practices."

23 Oliver Comwell Cox - Caste, Class and Race, P.15.
The early Hindu literature dwells much on the pre-eminence of the Brahmins. The Br. P. also notes the same sentiments when it states that the value of brahmins was greater than acquisition of the merit through practice of penance (35.48). Again it states that among all the varnas, the Brahmin should be considered as the highest. His superiority over the other three varnas is stated as under.

If a ksatriya produces corn without hurting the wealth of the brahmins, his sins are destroyed. If vaisya gives the corn remaining after the 1/6th portion allotted to king to the brahmins, he becomes free from all the sins. If a sudra gives pure anna produced by himself to brahmins, he gets freedom from many sins (218.12-26). The Br. P. notes a liberal attitude in letting the sudras, give the food to the brahmins. Again it is said that a man gets success in life by bowing down to brahmins (194.4).

The Brahmins were so highly respected that if their life was in danger they were to be saved at any cost (35.48).

The MS states that a king should never slay a Brahmin, though convicted of all the possible crimes and a 26 (69.16); also note the remarkable reference, viz. Gururagnirdvijatinam varnanaam Brahanmo Guruh (80.47).

king should not even form in his mind the idea of killing a priest. The Br. P. states that a king should protect all the four castes but special attention should be paid to the brahmins. They should be paid the highest respect as they are higher than the lord Viṣṇu. By ignoring the brahmins, the kings lost their kula or family. This passage again shows that the Brahmin was considered to be so high that his status was taken to be superior to that of lord Viṣṇu (104.63-65).

Elsewhere it is stated that a Brahmin is very sacred and he is protected on all the sides by various gods. Thus it is said that his body is made up of iron, his feet are protected by Viṣṇu, his head by Janārādana, his hands by Varāha, his back by Kurmaṭa, his heart by kṛṣṇa, his fingers by Mrga, his mouth by Vaiṣṇava, the eyes by Paksīga, and the ears by Vīttesa (167.27-30). Manu also states that Brahmans are to be worshipped and they are a supreme divinity. The Br. P. states that they are the gods on earth. The Br. P. shows the connection of brahmins with gods by noting that Kaṣyapa

27 MS viii. 379-381.
28 cf. also Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Yajñasastra, XX; Sarvathā Brahmamah Pūjyah Paramam Daivatam hi tat | Br.P.IX, 318.
29 36,14, vide also Devāh Parokshadevāh, pratyaksadeva Brāhmaṇāh | VIDS 19,20 Ete vai Devāh pratyakṣam yad brāhmaṇāh | Ts 1,7.31; vide Hazra R.C., Purānic records on Hindu rites & customs, P.258.
was the father of the Sun, Atri that of the Moon, Visvakarman pared the lustre of the Sun and the aforesaid Kasyapa was the father of fowls, beasts of prey, cows, vultures and hawks, serpents and other reptiles, gods and demons and other semi-divine beings (Adh.3).

The duties and privileges of the varnas are dealt with at length in the works on Dharmasāstra. The study of the vedas, offering sacrifices and bestowing gifts are the duties enjoined on all the first three castes, whereas teaching the vedas, officiating at sacrifices and receiving the gifts were the special privileges of the brahmins.

From the very early times the Brahmins were always connected with the vedic studies. The Br.P. also emphasises the importance of the vedic studies for the Brahmins and has numerous references of a like nature. The study of vedas was considered to be so important that at the completion of one's merits in heaven, it was considered to be most lucky if one gets a birth in the family of a brahmin and becomes well-versed

30 Dvijātīnāmādhyayenamī jyā dānām | Brāhmaṇasya ādhikāh
Pravacanayādānāpratigrāhah | Purveśu niyamastu | Rajñodhi-
kaṃ raksanām sarvābhītānām | Vaiśyasyādhikām kṛṣivanik
paśupāyakusītām | GDS 10.1-3, 7.50, vide also ADS 2.5.10.
5.8, BDS 1-10.2-5, VDS 2,13-19, VIDS 2,10-15, YS 1.118-119, MS 1.88-90; 10.75,79; Märk28,3-8, in the four Vedas as it was a prerequisite to the acquirement of mokṣa (58.76, 77). Besides, the Vedas, the Brahmins should know the Itihaśas, Purāṇas, other śāstras and should cultivate interest for other vidyās like the Jyātiśāstra and the Vāstuvidyā. Thus the Br. P. states that the Brahmins of Aṇḍradaśa are well-versed in the Vedas, and are the knowers of Itihaśa and purāṇa and are experts in all the śāstras (23.1-8). Again it is stated that the Brahmins of Puruṣottama-kṣetra recite the Vedas with their Aṅgas, Pāda and Krama and they are also experts in all the śāstras (46.8-10). Further it is stated that the king Indradyumna called the Brahmins expert in the Jyātiśāstra, well-versed in the Vedas and śāstras to find out the land proper for the temple-building (47.3). En Passant this shows the relationship between the king and Brahmins. Next it is said that the Brahmins well-versed in Vedas, vedāṅgas and śāstras had gathered together for the performance of the sacrifice (47.30-32). Again it is stated that the Brahmins and Gātakas worship lord kṛṣṇa and Balarama with various stotras, Yajus, Ṛks and Śamans (51.40-41). It is laid down that in a pilgrimage the Brahmins should take a bath and do the japa with the injunction of Vedas (57.12-20). It was very necessary for a Brahmin to study the Vedas and to know the Gāyātrī mantra by heart (107.4-13). The Brahmins were addicted to Svādhya and Vasatkāra (209.11).
Another duty prescribed for the Brahmins is to impart the teaching of the Vedic lore. Whatever may have been the case in very remote times; from the times of the Brāhmaṇa literature and in the times of the Dharmashastras, teaching Vedic literature was almost universally in the hands of the Brāhmaṇas. The Br. P. also states that the Brahmins imparted the Vedic teachings. It is said that the Brahmins of the Aundrādesa are known for the teaching profession (28.1-8).

The third duty and privilege incumbent on the Brahmins is to officiate as priests in the performance of the sacrifice. Sometimes the sacrifices used to last for many years. The Br. P. states that the sages had held a sacrifice in the Naimisāraṇya lasting for twelve years (I.69). While describing India, the Br. P. states that the Brahmins live in the middle part of the Bharatavarṣa and follow the occupation of sacrifice (27.17-18). The Brahmins of Aundrādesa are considered to be good for the performance of sacrifice and in performing Agnihota and they worship the smārta agni (28.1-8). The Brahmin's connection with the antique institution of Fire-worship is traceable to the Indo-European period. In the Rv, also Agni is celebrated in 200 hymns. The Br. P. also refers to the worship of domestic sacrificial fires, as stated above. The Brahmins of the Ekāmrakṣetra were experts in performing the Agnihotra and upāsanakṛiyā (46.8-10). The Brahmins who were experts in performing the sacrifices and clever in all the rites had gathered together for the performance of sacrifice in the Puruṣottamakṣetra (47.30-32). A Brahmin should perform the Agnihotra (107.7-8). His span of life is increased by performing the Agnikārya (107.4-15). Bharadvāja, the son of Aṅgirāmandana Brhaspati performed great sacrifices for king Bharata. Before that, in spite of all his efforts, Bharata had no son. As a result of these sacrifices, he got 100 sons (13.59-60). For the references of other sacrifices vide the sections on 'sages' and 'sacrifice' in the chapters VI & VII on 'Mythology and Religion' respectively.

As regards the participation of Brahmins in political affairs, the Br. P. mentions the famous example of the unrighteous Vena who was dethroned by the Brahmins on account of his misbehaviour (Adh.4). "The Purohitā or the chief priest was an indispensable appendage to the royalty of the period." For the details regarding the status of Purohitā, vide the Chapter XI on 'Political Structure'.

33 Macdonell A.A., Vedic Mythology, P.89.
Again it appears that the right of officiating at sacrifices belonged to the Brahmans and the Brahmans obtained land from the kṣatriyas for the performance of the sacrifice (168.3-5).

The third means of livelihood permitted to the brahmans was receiving gifts from a worthy or unblemished persons. The Br. P. states that after worshipping lord Jagannātha, one should worship the brahmans and should give them in dāna twelve cows, clothes, gold, umbrellas, shoes, and vessels of copper. Then the brahmans should be given a dinner consisting of milk, sweet dishes, jaggery and ghee. The brahmans should then be given twelve pots full of water and then one should give dakṣiṇā to them according to one's capacity (67.40-43). The annadāna given to brahmans is highly eulogised. It is stated that one whose annadāna is accepted by ten brahmans never falls in the category of birds and animals. The brahmans were given the dāna of gold, jewels, elephants, horses, etc. (44.4). If a brahmin engrossed in the vedic studies gives the food brought by bhikṣa to a brahmin engrossed in svādhyāya in dāna he gets the prosperity and happiness in the world. A man who gives food in dāna obtained through justice to the brahmans who are the knowers of veda gets freedom from sins (218.12-26). One who gives dāna to Brahmans and food to cultured brahmans and srotriyas
It seems that the condition of the brahmins was very poor and the Br. P. also evidences the fact when it states that at the time of famine, the family of the sage Visvāmitra was in such distress, that his wife wanted to sell her son in order to maintain herself (7.106). But a Brahmin who sold his son for the sake of maintenance was much abused by the others, and was called Brāhmaṇādhama (150.2).

Again, the Brahmins were called for the performance of vratas and other religious observances. Thus the brahmins of Aundradesā were considered to be experts for the performance of the ceremonies like śrāddha, dāna, marriage, sacrifice and others (28.1-8). The brahmins were called to give samskaras to a boy (111.9). It was believed that a Brahmin should always remain engrossed in giving dāna, performing sacrifice, practising penance and offering Agnihotra and tarpaṇa. For his maintenance, he should perform sacrifices and teach others. He should accept whatever is obtained through the performance of the sacrifice. It is the duty of the Brahmins to benefit others and not to harm anyone. It is the highest wealth of Brahmins to have friendship of all. He should approach his wife in the Rtu-kāla alone and should consider cows, jewels and things belonging to others as equal, (222.3-6).
Various types of Brahmins were called for a srāddha and they were called the Paṅktipāvanas. The srāddha should be performed by those who are restrained, learned, and intent on performing the Agnihotra, those who are the Trināciketas (i.e., who study the three Anuvāks, viz.: "ayam vāvāyaḥ" of the Trināciketa in the kathasamhitā), the trisuparnas (i.e., those who study the anuvāk "Brahmameta man" and perform the rites related to it), the knowers of vedas and their angas, the Trimadhus (i.e., those who study the rk "Madhuvatāḥ" and perform the Madhuvrata), the ācāryas, upādhyāyas, the knowers of the mandala brāhmaṇa and the purāṇas (220.110-115). The Brahmins should perform a srāddha with the mantras following their own varna and the injunction of their own kula (220.304).

The treatment with which the brahmans received shows the high esteem in which they were held. It is stated that the Brahmins called for the srāddha should be respectfully propitiated, first the ācamana - water for sipping - should be offered to them. They should be offered a seat. After performing the srāddha according to the rites, dinner should be given to them. Then they should be given a farewell with sweet speech, and one should go with them up to the door (220.121-124) & (1-8,9). It is stated that one who hears the story of Vena after bowing down to Brahmins daily does not despair about what he has done and what he has not (4.27). A Grhastha is enjoined to be the resort of all the brahmins who study Veda, take a bath in a tīrtha, go round the world for the tīrthayātrā, who have no house, who have not taken their food, and who sleep at the place where they are at the time of sunset. Such Brahmins should be respectfully honoured by him (222.33-36). In the sacrifice of king Indradyumna many brahmins took their dinner (46.23). Before taking a bath in the river, one should give a dinner to the brahmins (76.19). Before the performance of a sacrifice, the brahmins should be satisfied with a dinner (187.5.58).

As regards the qualifications of Brahmins, it was believed that it was very essential for a brahmin to have the samskāras like cūdākarma, upanayana, vedādhyayana and those who did not study the Vedas were considered to be sūdras even though by birth they were brahmins (111.7-8).

The anger of a Brahmin was much feared. The sages were capable of effective cursing. Once Agni asked bhikṣā from the king Kārtavīrya Arjuna and he gave the whole kingdom to him. In devouring the whole kingdom, Agni burnt the hermitage of the sage Vasistha, the son of Varuṇa and Vasistha cursed Kārtavīrya as he was the cause of the whole trouble, he would be killed by a brahmin and ultimately Kārtavīrya met his death at the hands of Parasurāma (93.190-197). When the sage Gautama saw that Indra had approached his wife Ahalyā in his absence, he cursed him to be a Sahasrākaśa (87.59). For other instances regarding Brahmans and curse, vide the section 'sages' in the chapter VI on 'Mythology'.

The Brahmans belonged to various religious creeds. Thus it is said that the Brahmans of the Sāmalladvīpa worshipped lord Viṣṇu in the form of Vāyu (20.30). Dami, the Brahmī-class of Kuśadvīpa worshipped lord Janaḍdana in the form of Brahmā (20.39). The Brahmī class of Sākadvīpa worshipped lord Viṣṇu in the form of Sun (20.71,72). It was believed that those brahmans who worship the Sun with pure faith and devotion get the desired things and the highest status (28.37). Some brahmans worshipped lord Mahādeva (40.46) (74.50). Some others worshipped lord Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma (51.40-41). It was a belief that the brahmans who devoted themselves to lord Nārāyaṇa get the highest siddhi (173.135,136), (226.14,15). In the worship of lord Nārāyaṇa twelve brahmans were invited and they were required to be proficient in the vedas, Itihāsa and purāṇas (67.36-37).

Strict rules were observed regarding the purification. The Br. P. states that on the death of someone in the family, a brahmin gets purified in ten days, a kṣatriya in twelve days, a vaidya in fifteen days and a śūdra in a month (220.63,64). During this period, the Brahmin should not perform either the dāna or homa and all the other three varṇas also should not perform their own work (221.47,48).

The right conduct, viz. Sadācāra was always the behaviour pattern expected from the Brahmins. A brahmin who wants the right knowledge should always get it through the highest means of jñāna and sadācāra (122.166). The Brahmins are praised for the akaitavāvṛtti (171.36).

Such were the normal duties of the Brahmins. The Br. P. furnishes an instance when a brahmin followed the occupation of agriculture (91.2). In the times of distress, a brahmin was allowed to do the work of a kṣatriya and a vaisya but in normal times the karmasamkara should not be done (222.20). The rigidity of occupation according to caste is remarkable.

The Br. P. also provides information regarding the various gotras of the Brahmins. Thus it states that the sons of the sage Visvāmitra were Devarāta, Kati, Hiranyākṣa, Renu, Renuka, Saṅkṛti, Gālava, Muddala, Madhucchanda, Jaya, Devala, Aṣṭaka, Kacchapa and Hārita and the famous gotras of the Kausikas were Pāṇiniṣṇas, Babhrus, Dhyānajapyas, Pārthivas, Devarātas, Sālaṅkayanas, Bāskalas, Jopitas, Yanadūtas (according to 'ga' ms. Yamabhūtas), and Karuṣakas (according to the ms. 'ga' Kārīkayās) (10.61,62). The ms. 'ga' adds the gotras as under.: Sausravas, Kausikas, Saindhavāyanas, Devalas, Reṇus, Yājñāvalkyaś, Audumbaras, Ambubhiṣṇas, Avastāras, Kayanacuelas, Salavatyas, Hiranyākaśas, Sābhrits, Gālawas.

The Brahma-hatyā was considered to be the greatest sin (123.54,74,157) and one who had killed a brahmin was considered to be unfit to be seen or touched by others (123.54). The sin of brahmin-murder can never be destroyed (123.74).

As Indra had killed the brahmin Vṛtra, he had to conceal himself in a lotus-stalk for a thousand years (A.96). One could not rest in peace after committing the sin of Brahma-hatyā. He was ostracized. The expiation consisted in performing the asvamedha sacrifice whereupon he became a Lohagandhī (12.11-14).

One who speaks sweetly on face but bites at the back, is inconsistent in thought and act, who is jealous, who abuses brahmins and shows false modesty is considered to be a Brahmaghāṭin. One who abuses the deities, the vedas, the adhyātmaśāstras, and the brahmins is a Brahmaghāṭin (164.32-37).

A kṣatriya who retreats from the battlefield and who abuses the brahmins incurs the sin of the murder of a brahmin (165.31-34). One who gets the vision of lord kṛṣṇa on facing the south becomes free from the sin of a brahmin-murder (65.33).
The status of a Brahmin was considered to be so high that his degradation from the status was a very serious affair. The Br. P. states that to attain Brahminhood is very difficult. A brahmin is a brahmin by his very nature. By committing sins, a brahmin slips from his path and even though born in the highest caste, degrades himself. One who maintains himself by adhering to the dharma proper for a brahmin gets the Brahmabhāva and one who giving up the brahminhood takes the dharma proper for kṣatriyas slips from the brahminhood and takes a birth among the kṣatriyas. A brahmin who through infatuation and greediness follows the dharma proper for a vaisyā gets the birth among the vaisyas and thus degraded from his original position, he attains the śudratva (223.12-19). The awareness of the higher value of character and learning to power and wealth is remarkable.

The Br. P. represents a drastic contrast between the conditions of a brahmin and that of a śudra. Thus a brahmin who dies with the food of a śudra in his belly, falls down from the Brahmaloka and becomes a śudra. A brahmin gets the birth of him with whose food he maintains himself. One who gives up the brahminhood obtained by him naturally, who eats the uneatable, falls down from the brahminhood. A drunkard, a killer of the brahmins, a thief, a violator of vows, an unholy man, one not engrossed in svādhyāya, a sinner, a greedy person, one not benefitting others, a kundasi, a seller of soma, one serving low people, one approaching the teacher's wife and abusing the teacher and one who discards and ignores a brahmin deteriorates from the position of a brahmin (223.24-32).

Again, a brahmin who acts badly and eats the food of mixed castes becomes a śūdra. The birth, the saṃskāra, the vedādhyayana and progeny - all these factors do not form the cause of the dvijatma but the main cause of the dvijatva is sadācāra. All people are considered to be brahmins by actions only. By the highest type of action, even a śūdra can attain brahmminhood. The Brahmasyabhāva is common everywhere. Those who have a pure nature always give the satisfaction of a brahmin. Lord Brahma himself has so ordained at the time of creation. A brahmin is a great moving kṣetra. A brahmin should always tread on the right path and should always remain satisfied. A brahmin who wants prosperity should go through Brahmapārtha. Thus a brahmin who goes on the right path and performs Agnihotra gets the Brahmasvabhāva. A śūdra becomes a brahmin by the practice of dharma and a brahmin gets the śūdra by following adharma (223.54-65). This shows the liberal attitude of the Brahma purāṇa towards the śūdras and the importance of the standards to be preserved by the brahmans. Further this also shows that according to the Brahma purāṇa it is not the birth that distinguishes a brahmin from a südra but it is the vṛtta that forms the marking line.35

Kṣatriyas

The next class in the ladder of the social order consists of the kṣatriyas. The Br. P. provides the following information regarding the kṣatriyas. Just as it was the primary duty of the brahmins to perform sacrifice and study the vedas, similarly the kṣatriya's main duty consisted in fighting. They had to protect the subject by fighting against the evil factors. The Br. P. states that a kṣatriya should give dāna to brahmins and should worship gods with various sacrifices and should remain engrossed in the svādhyāya. He should maintain himself through the use of weapons and the protection of earth. But his main duty is the protection of earth, as his sacrifices are protected as a result of the fulfilment of his duty. A king is assigned the duty of preserving the social order, punishing the wicked and maintaining the good, whereby he gets the desired results (222.6-10). The kṣatriyas who want kingship and want to have victory in the battlefield should bow down to king

35 Na yonirnāpi sāmkāro na śrutirnā ca saṃtatiḥ
Kāraṇāni dvijatvasya vṛttameva tu kāraṇām
Sarvo yam Brāhmaṇo loke vṛttena tu vidhiyate
Vṛtte sthitasca sūdro'pe Brāhmaṇatvam ca gacchati 223.54-55.
Prthu (4.117-118). A kṣatriya who retreats from the battlefield incurred the sin of brahmin-murder (165.31-34).

Among the various other duties mentioned for the kṣatriyas, the Br. P. states that a king should protect the three varṇas (104.63-65). A kṣatriya should perform a sraddha following the rules of his own varṇa and injunctions of his own varṇa and kula accompanied by the recitation of the mantras (220.3,4). While describing India, the Br.P. states that the kṣatriyas stay in the middle part of India and follow the occupation of fighting (27.17,18). In a pilgrimage, they should take a bath and do the japa with the recitation of the veda (67.18-20). This shows that the kṣatriyas too like brahmins studied veda. Elsewhere they are mentioned along with the members of the other castes as witnessing the sacrifice conducted by the sages in the Naimiṣaranya (1.8-9). When a vaisya gets a birth in the family of a kṣatriya, he gets good saṃskāras from his very birth. After the upanayana he should remain engrossed in the Brahmavāra-vrata, give dāna occasionally, give dakṣinā and perform a sacrifice with great pomp, study vedas, worship the three fires viz. Āhāvaniya and others with a desire to get heaven. If he is a king he should give dāna and protect the subjects. He should speak truth, remain pure, practice righteousness, and try for the trivarga, viz., Dharma, Artha and Kāma. He should restrain his mind and body and take the 1/6th part from the income of the subject. He should not enjoy the subjects of enjoyment according to his own desire but adhering to Dharma he should perform all his duties. He should approach his wife at the time of the Ṛtukāla, should observe a fast and should remain engrossed in the svadhyāya. He should always receive the three castes with a happy mind. He should always give food to śudras and should not give vent to selfishness or desire. He should always keep the material ready for receiving the pīṭras and guests. He should offer worship according to the proper rites and should give up his body in battle for the protection of brahmins. He should offer oblations with mantras. Thus following the Dharma proper for a kṣatriya, he becomes a brahmin in his next birth and studies the vedas. This passage throws good light over the duties and condition of kṣatriyas (223.37-53). As regards his duties in warfare, vide the Chapter XI on 'Political Structure'.

The Br. P. names various types of kṣatriyas. Thus it states that the class Kuru of Plakṣadvīpa is equivalent to the kṣatriya class (20.17). The kṣatriyas of the Śālmaladvīpa possessed aruṇa colour (20.30), and those of the Kuśadvīpa were called Śusmī, those of the Krauṇcadvīpa were called Puṣkara (30.53,54), and those of the Śākadvīpa were called Magadha (30.71,72).

The ksatriyas called Dhārṣṭakas and Kāruṇas were the sons of Dhṛṣṭa and Kāruṣa and they fought the battle vigorously (7.25,36,42). King Sagara got an āgneyāstra from the sage Aurva and defeated the ksatriyas called Talājānghas, Kaikāyas, Sakas, Pahnavas, and Pāradas (3.32). They lost their caste for rebelling against the descendants of king Hariscandra. The Br. P. gives the incident as follows. After having performed other Sagara's natal and rites and taught him all the vedas and provided him with a fiery missile, the sage Aurva enjoined king Sagara to slay the Haihayas. He then exterminated the Sakas, Yavanas, Kambojas, Pāradas and Pahlavas. But when on the point of being slaughtered by Sagara, they took recourse to the sage Vasistha and fell down before him. Vasistha asked Sagara to restrain himself and Sagara released them after destroying their caste and making them change their customs. He released the Sakas after causing the half of their heads to be shaved and the Yavanas and Kambojas after having had their heads completely shaved. The Pāradas were made to wear long hair, and the Pahlavas to wear beards. The Sakas, Yavanas, Kambojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Konisarpas, Mahiṣakas, Darvas, Colas and Keralas had all been ksatriyas but were deprived of their social and religious position by the great Sagara, according to the advice of Vasistha.37 This leads to an inference that position in Aryan society was not originally wholly dependent on birth.

The five hundred sons of Raji were called Rajeya ksatriyas (11.3). The descendants of the Ajamīdha dynasty were called the Ajamīdha and Somaka ksatriyas, those of Janamejaya were called the Janamejaya ksatriyas (13.101,125,203-204, 207) and those five sons of king Sibi, viz. Aṅga, Vaṅga, Suhma, Pundra and Kalinga were called the Bāleya ksatriyas (13.31).

The Br. P. states that normally a ksatriya should adhere to his own occupation but in abnormal times, a ksatriya may perform the work of a vaisya or a śūdra but if he is not in distress, he should not perform a śūdra's work (222.18-20). It follows from this that in times of distress, a ksatriya might follow even a śūdra's avocation (220.18-20).

Further the Br. P. states that the ksatriyas of Kuśadvipa perform all the rites enjoined by the śāstras and worship lord Janardana in the form of lord Brahma to destroy their sins (20.39), those of the Sākadvipa are devoted to Sun (20.71,72). In the Hīkṣṭadvipa Utākalapradesa, the ksatriyas are very peaceful, religious, addicted to their own karmans and have control over their senses (28.8,9). There are some ksatriyas who lived in Ujjain and worship lord Mahādeva (43.30), (40.48). Some are the worshippers of lord krṣṇa and Balarama (66.10-12). This shows that they followed various religious creeds (66.10-12). It was believed that the ksatriyas get the highest siddhi by devoting themselves to lord Nārayana (178.185-186).

37 Br. P., Adh. 8; Harivaṃsa XIV, 773-83,

As regards purification, the Br. P. states that on the death of someone in the family, a ksatriya gets purified in twelve days and during that period, he should not perform his work (220.63,64), (221.147,158).

The value of right conduct was highly emphasized for a ksatriya (220.63,64,147).

Vaishyas

The terms used in the Br. P. to denote this order are vis1 and vaisya which are of vedic antiquity. The vaishyas form the third order of the four classes. The Br. P. states that they reside in the middle part of India and follow the occupation of vānijya (27.17,18).

Various types of vaishyas are mentioned. Thus those residing in Plakṣadvipa were called the vivisvas (20.17), those in the Śālmaladvīpa possessed the yellow colour (20.30), those residing in Kusādvīpa were called Snehas (20.39), those of the Krauṇcadvīpa were called Dhanyas (20.53,54) and those of Sākadvīpa were called Mānasas (20.71,72).

Lord Brahmā has proscribed three means of maintenance for the vaisyas, viz. cattle-breeding, mercantile and agriculture. The vaisyas should study the vedas, perform the sacrifices, give dāna, adhere to Dharma, and perform the Nitya and Naimittika Karmans (222.11-12). They were to give the 1/6th part of their income to the king (218.19-20). They are described as witnessing the sacrifice along with the members of other castes (1.8,9). They performed the śrāddhas with the recitation of mantras following the rules of their own varṇa and the injunctions of their own kula (220.3,4). They followed ākām aś ākām king in the procession (44.27). In the place of a pilgrimage, the vaisyas should take a bath and perform the rites according to the vedas (67,19-20). This shows that the vaisyas possessed the knowledge of vedas.

The vaisyas were allowed to perform the śrāddha with the accompaniment of vedic recital. They were to perform it following the rules of their own varṇa and the injunctions of their own family (220.3,4). This shows the participation of the vaisyas in the religious activities.
On the death of someone in the family, a vaisya remains unholy for 15 days and he is prohibited to perform his work during that period (220.63,64), (221.147,158).

The vaisyas belonged to various religious creeds. Thus the vaisyas of Sāmaladvīpa worshipped lord Viṣṇu in the form of Vayu (20.30), those of the Kuśadvīpa perform all the rites enjoined by the sāstras and perform the sacrifices in honour of lord Brahmā to destroy their karmans (20.39); those of Śākadvīpa worship lord Viṣṇu in the form of Sun (20.71,72). Some other vaisyas worship lord Mahādeva (40.48,136). Some others worship lord Nārāyaṇa, Viṣṇu and Śiva and Salarāma (56.17-18), (65.9-10), (66.10-12). The vaisyas get the highest siddhi by devoting themselves to lord Nārāyaṇa (178.185-186).

Stray references to the vaisyas show that they were peaceful, religious, adhering to their own karmans and having control over their senses (28.8-9). In eschatological matters also, the vaisyas do not seem to have suffered from any serious disabilities. The Br. P. states that they obtained the highest status if they worship Sun with pure faith and devotion (28.37) and Viṣṇu (226.14); and on hearing the Śiva-stuti composed by Dakṣa, they attained the Rudraloka (40.136).
The vaiśyas of the Ekāraṇakṣetra are said to follow their own Dharma (41.29), and some vaiśyas are described as living in Ujjain (43.30). They lived happily in the reign of king Dasaratha (123.6) and in the kingdom of Rāma, they respected the ksatriyas (213.143). The vaiśyas who hoard wealth and adhere to Vaiśya-vaṭṭi should bow down to king Prthu, the bestower of Vṛtta (4.120).

In ordinary circumstances, a vaisya was enjoined to follow his own functions but in times of difficulty he was allowed to perform the functions of the śūdra (220.18-20).

Śūdras

The śūdras constitute the fourth step of the ladder forming the social structure. The Br. P. also like the famous Puruṣasūkta states that the śūdra was treated out of the feet of lord Nārāyaṇa (56.22,23) and it implied that he was lowest among the four classes and was bound to serve all the people.

The Br. P. states that there were different classes in different dvīpas corresponding to the śūdra class. Thus the śūdras were called Śāvina in Plakṣadvīpa (20.17), Māndāhas in the Kuśadvīpa (20.39), Khyātas in Krauṇcadvīpa (20.53,54), Mandagas in the Sākadvīpa (20.71,72). The śūdras of the Sālmaladvīpa were black in colour (20.30).
The Br. P. provides reference to the 'śudras which gives us an idea about their condition. They had gathered together with the members of other classes to witness the sacrifice conducted by the sages (1.8,9). This shows that their presence in the sacrifice was not considered to be unworthy, and that they were not banned from religious observance, though, of course, they are not mentioned here as performing the sacrifice. Again, it is said that the holy 'śudras who desire the highest bliss in this world and who are engrossed in serving the three castes should worship king Prthu (4.121). This shows that their function was to serve the people of the other three castes and that they were considered fit to receive the highest bliss. The 'śudras are also described as performing the sacrifice. Thus the 'śudras of the Śālmaladvīpa performed the sacrifices (20.30), those of the Kusadvīpa performed all the rites enjoined by the sāstras and also performed the sacrifices, those of Śākadvīpa also performed the sāstra-enjoined karmans (20.39,71,72). In the Utkalapradeśā, the 'śudras were very religious, peaceful, adhered to their own karmans and restrained (28.8,9), (41.29). The Br. P. also states that they lived in Ujjain (43.30). The 'śudras of the Purusottamakṣetra are said to adhere to their own Dharma (46.8). At one place, the Br. P. states that the snāna and japa to be performed by the people of the first three varnas should be accompanied by the vedic mantras whereas the snāna and japa to be performed by the women and sūdras should be done without the accompaniment of the vedic mantras (37.19). It is said that a brahmin who did not study the vedas was equal to a sūdra. This also shows that a sūdra was not allowed to study the vedas (110.7,8). This shows that they were banned from the vedic studies. In the region of king Daśaratha, they lived happily (123,6) and in the kingdom of Raṣa, they served the first three varnas (213.148).

As regards the performance of śrāddha, the Br.P. states that women and the sūdras should perform the śrāddha without kindling fire, performing sacrifice and reciting the mantras (220.4), (222.13,14). This is in consonance with the Dharmaśāstras. 38

The longest period of impurification viz., of one month is attached to the sūdras, and they can resume their work after that period (220.63,64), (221.147,158).

As regards the duties of the sūdras, the Br.P. states that a sūdra should serve the twice-born and should maintain himself by buying and selling things or through architecture. He should give dana and perform the Pakayajānas without the mantras (222.13-14). This shows that besides serving the twice-born, a südra was allowed other means of maintenance.

The südras followed various religious creeds. Thus it is said that the südras of the Plākṣadvipa worship lord Viṣṇu in the form of Vāyu, those of the Kuśadvipa worshipped lord Viṣṇu in the form of Brahma, those of Sākadvipa worshipped lord Viṣṇu in the form of Sun (20.30,33,71,72). The südras of the Utkalapradesa also worshipped lord Sun and it is said that those who worship the Sun with pure faith and devotion got the desired things and the highest status (28.37). Again it is stated that the südras attain Rudraloka by hearing the stuti composed by Dakṣa in the honour of lord Śiva (40.46,136). The Br. P. again states that the südras who worship Kṛṣṇa get freedom from all the pains and obtain the status of gods, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Vidyādharas and other desired objects (58, 61,62). Some other südras are said to have worshipped lord kṛṣṇa, Balarāma and Subhadrā (66.10-12). The südras get the highest siddhi by devoting themselves to lord Nārāyaṇa (178, 185-186), (226.14). Those pious südras who want prosperity should bow down to king Pṛthu (4.119).

The status of a südra is considered to be very low.
and it is evidenced by the Br. P. when it states that one is a śūdra by his very nature. If a brahmin follows the Karmans of a vaiśya adhering to greediness and infatuation, he becomes a śūdra. If he is discarded by the caste, he falls down from the Brahmāloka and gets śūdratva. When a ksatriya or a vaiśya performs an action proper for a śūdra, the condition of varṇa-saṃskāratva arises. Those who do not follow their own Karmans get śūdramhood (223.19-21).

Again, it is said that lord Brahmā himself has laid down that one should not take the food of a śūdra. A brahmin who dies with the food of śūdra in his belly obtains the condition of a śūdra even though he be an agnihotrin or a performer of sacrifices (223.22-25).

From the above account, it could be seen how base the śūdras were considered to be but at the same time the Br. P. shows a lenient attitude by providing for them the means to reach the elevated positions. Thus it states that a śūdra who purifying himself by knowledge, maintains himself by following his own Dharma gets the merit of that Dharma (223.20-22). Again, it states that a śūdra who performs all the actions according to the śāstric injunctions, who takes the food remaining after the reception of guests, who serves higher people, never thinks ill of others, always treads on the right path, receives gods and pitrs has a firm determination of receiving all the persons, has intercourse with the wife at the proper time and in the Ṛtukāla, dines punctually and takes the food remaining from that eaten by the learned men and the sages and never eats meat, gets the birth of a vaiśya (223.32-36). It is also said that a ādāra who passes the life according to the actions prescribed by the śastra should be considered to be holier than the twice-born (223.54.58

While describing India, the Br. P. states that the ādāras live in the middle of India and serve others (27.17,18).

Sub-castes and Occupations

Besides the four main varṇas, there were other professions and crafts even in the times of the Samhitās. MM. Dr. Kane observes that owing to the cultural development, division of labour arose and numerous arts and crafts came to be developed and they were in process of contributing to the complexity of the system by creating numerous sub-castes based upon such occupations and in the times of the samhitās and Brāhmaṇas there were groups founded on occupations that had become castes or were in the process of developing into castes.39

The Br. P. gives a long list of such groups based on the occupations. It does not throw light on the derivation of these groups but it seems that at the time of the Br. P. these groups had developed into full-fledged sub-castes. As numerous professions developed and as it became difficult to assign any particular derivation for groups of people, Manu (X.40), Vasistha (18.7) and the Anuṣāsana Parva (148.29) laid down that men's sub-caste was to be known from their actions and occupations. This shows that according to most writers castes in the times of the smṛtis were predominantly occupational.40 Besides, the castes having an occupational basis, the Br. P. enumerates many other sub-castes of mixed origin and other low castes. For the sake of convenience, the list in the Br. P. is arranged in an alphabetical order.:

Ajaśālā - A goat-herd. This suggests that people maintained themselves on cattle (44.32).

Antyaja - This word is applied to all low castes like the cāndāla in Manu (IV.161), Atri (139) enumerates seven antyajas, viz. Rajaka (washer-man), Carmakāra (worker in hides), Nāṭa (dancer), Buruda (worker in bamboos), Kaivarta (fisherman), meda and bhilla.41

40 Ibid., P. 59.
41 For details, Ibid., PP.70-71.
The Br. P. states that lord Brahmā created the four principal castes, Antyajātas and Mlecchas. The word used here is Antyajāta and not Antyaja (45.35).

Antyāvāsāyin or Antyāvasāyin - Manu separates 'Antyas' and 'Antyāvasāyins' and says that the Antyāvasāyin is the offspring of a candāla male from a Niṣāda female, that he is condemned even by the untouchables and stays in a cemetery (x.39). Vas.Dhs.S. 18.3 holds that the antyāvasāyin is the offspring of a sūdra from a vaisya woman.

The Br. P. states that in Kaliyaga a brahmin would become an antyāvasāyin (230.12). Again it is said that on touching an antyāvasāyin, one should take a bath and purify himself by seeing the Sun (221.135,142).

Apāpakāraka - The reference here is to a cook who seems to be an expert in preparing apāpa, i.e. a kind of fine bread. This suggests that people used to serve as cooks even in those days (44.23 ff.).

Asikāra - Some followed the occupation of sword-making (44.37).

---

42 Ibid., F.71.

43 This sub-caste is mentioned in an additional list provided by the ms. 'kha' mentioned in the Br.P. in the f.n. following the st. 44.25. Now onwards all the sub-castes mentioned in this list will be indicated by ms. 'kha!'.
Asmakuttaka - This occupation consists in breaking or bruising with a stone. It occurs in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.). It is mentioned in the yājñavalkyāsūrti also (III.49).

Astravikravaka - Some followed the occupation of selling weapons (44.29).

Aurabhrika - One who maintains himself on the goats suffers in the Vahnijvāla hell (22.25). This was not considered to be a respectable occupation.

Bhisak - According to usanas (26) he is the offspring of a clandestine union between a brahmin and a ksatriya girl and he maintains himself by studying the āyurveda in its eight parts, on astronomy, astrology and mathematics (verse 27). According to the Br. P. (quoted by Aparārka P.1171) he lives by surgery and by attending upon patients.44 These words are not met with in the present edition, but the present Br. P. states that Dhanvantari, the Promulgator of the science of medicine, obtained the knowledge of Āyurveda from the sage Bharadvāja, divided it into eight parts and taught it to his pupils (11.38).

Cāndāla - According to Gautama (IV.15-16), Vās. Dh.S. (18.1), Baud. Dh.s. (I.9.7), Manu (X.12), Yājñavalkya (I.93) and Anuśāsana (48.11) he is a pratiloma caste sprung of a śūdra from a brāhmaṇa woman. He is the lowest among men (Manu X.12), beyond the pale of religious observances prescribed for the four varṇas and often spoken of in the same breadth with dogs and crows (e.g. Āp. Dh.s. 4.9.5, Gautama 15.35, Yaj. I.103).

The Br. P. devotes one whole adhyāya in describing a Cāndāla who was a staunch devotee of Viśnu (A.227). There it is said that he maintained himself by 'Sadvṛtti' and was engrossed in serving others (227.3). Elsewhere it is stated that by practising righteousness, one gets birth as a candala (227.99). The meat brought by a cāndāla is considered to be pure (221.127). One who offers a śrāddha by money obtained through injustice does not satisfy the ancestors suffering in the births of Cāndāla, Pulkasa etc. (220.98).

Carmarkāra - Atri enumerates Carmakāra as one of the seven antyajas. According to Usānas (4), he is the offspring of a śūdra from a kṣatriya girl, whereas the verse 21 says that those sprung from a Vaidhaka and a brāhmaṇa girl subsist by working on hides. This name persists to this day as Cambhāra or Camāra.

45 Atri (193), Āṅgiras (Jīvāṅkanda ed.I; P.554), Yama (An.ed.) 33, Viśnu Dh.s. 51.8, Āpastamba 9.32, Parāśāra (VI.44).

The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Chāgasabha - The Br. P. states that one who keeps goats suffers in the Krmipūya hell (22.20).

Chedaka - The meaning seems to be a surgeon - one who cuts or operates (44.39).

Citrakahara - The painter is mentioned (44.36).

Dāhaka - The meaning seems to be one who cures the diseases by the application of a burning iron-rod etc. (44.39). Even at present this practice of curing the diseases is prevalent in the villages.

Dandakara - One who prepares staffs or sticks (44.37).

Devaloka - He is an attendant upon an idol and subsists on the offsprings made to it. The Br. P. mentions him among the Panktidūṣaka brahmins (220.134).

Dānvavikravinn - Some people maintained themselves by selling corn (44.33).

Dūta - Some people worked as messengers, envoys or ambassadors (44.37).
Gaịavaidya - There were the veterinary doctors specialised in curing the diseases of elephants (44.39).

Garuda - The dictionary meaning of 'Garuḍika' is a charmer or a dealer in antidotes, either of which seems to have been meant here (44.35). The dictionary meaning of 'Garuḍa' is 'shaped like Garuḍa' or 'coming from or relating to Garuḍa.47 The Hindi translation of the Br. P. gives the meaning as 'an expert in Garuḍa lore.48

Gayaka - Some practised the art of singing as a livelihood (44.34).

Gopāla - The cowherds are mentioned along with others (44.32). They played an important part in the childhood of lord krṣṇa (A.180-212).

Gaṇḍiva - These veterinary doctors specialised in curing the diseases related to cows (44.39).

Grāmāhanta - It is stated that one who kills the people of the whole village goes to Vaitarāṇī (22.23).

Gramavaṣaṇaka - It is said that one who performs sacrifices for the whole village suffers in the Rudhirandha hell (22.22).

Gāḍāvikāśika - Some people maintained themselves by selling gāda, i.e. the thick sugar formed into lumps by thickening of the juice of the sugarcane through boiling process (44.33).

Hamsaka - The meaning is not clear. As it is mentioned along with other occupations related to cattle-rearing, it may mean those who used to keep geese or swans (44.32).

Isukāra - Some people maintained themselves by preparing arrows. It is mentioned in the list of the ms.'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Javasahāra - The meaning is not clear. Either it is a complete word or it may be a combination of Javasa and Hāra or Jaya and Sahāra. According to Monier Williams 'Javasa' is a word though given in native lexicons, has not yet been met with in any published text.49 The same is the case with the word 'Sahāra', though its meaning is given as a species of mango-tree, it being probably a prākṛta form of Saha-kāra. If the word 'Javasahāra' is an alternative for 'Yavasahāra', then an inference might be made that some people depended for their maintenance on good pasture (44.31).

Kaivarta - Manu (X.34) tells us that the inhabitants of Aryavarta employ the name Kaivarta to denote the offspring of a nisāda from an ayogava woman, who is also called mārgava and dāsa and who subsists by plying boats. The other view is that he is born of a prostitute by a kṣatraya. The Br. P. states that a Kaivarta falls in the Rudhirāndha Hell (22.21).

Kāṃsvakara - Narada (Rṣadāna 274) and Viṣṇu Dh.s. (X.4) mention him in connection with the balance ordeal. He is the modern 'Kamsāra' (in Gujarati) and 'Kamsāra' (in Marathi) dealing with vessels. The Br. P. mentions him along with others (44.36).

Karmakāra - Viṣṇu Dh.s. (51.14) mentions this caste. It is most probably the same as Karmāra. But Saṅkha (Prose) quotes Karmakāra and Karmāra. The Br. P. mentions 'Karmakāra' in the regular list (44.37) but mentions 'Karmāra' department.

---

50 Ibid., P.1196.
It cannot be decided whether the Br. P. considers both of them to be identical or separate classes.

Karmāra - It is mentioned in vedic literature. Manu also mentions it (IV.215). In Bengal, the Lohar is a scheduled caste.54 The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms, 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Karnin - The Br. P. states that one who prepares karni, a type of an arrow, suffers in Viṣāsana hell (22.16).

Kāsthavikrayaka - Some people maintained themselves by selling wood (44.29).

Kathaka - A professional story-teller. He may belong to the category of bard or panegyrist (44.34).

Kausakāra - The meaning seems to be one who prepares silken garments from silk-worms (44.36).

Kavi - There were some who were experts in composing various types of poems (Kavyaḥ Kāvyakartārah Nānākāvyavisāra-dāh) (44.35).

Kāvastha - The word Kāvastha does not occur in the ancient Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, Baudhāyana, 54 Ibid.

Vasistha, nor in the Manusmrti. In the first centuries of the Christian era the Kayastha was merely an officer and the word was possibly derived from or is a Sanskrit approximation of some foreign word for an officer, though in some parts of the country the Kayasthas also had come to form a caste in medieval times. The Br. P. mentions them along with the Mallas, Dutas and others (44.37).

Kesakāra - There were some people who followed the occupation of hair-dressing. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Kesaravikrayin - It means one who sells the mane of a lion or horse. The Br. P. states that one who sells kesara suffers in the taptaloha hell (22.11).57

Khadgakāra - Some people followed the occupation of preparing swords. It is mentioned in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.). Elsewhere it is said that a khadgakartā suffers in the Visasena hell (22.16,17).

Kuhakājīvin - One who maintains himself on wild cocks. The Br. P. states that a Kuhakājīvin suffers in the 55 Kane P.V., Ibid., P.76.

57 The reading of the ms. 'ga', viz. 'Kesaravikrayi' seems to be better, which would mean 'one who sells lions'.

247
Asipatravana hell. The Hindi translation takes the word to mean 'magician'.

Kukkutaposaka - The Br. P. states that one who maintains the Kukkuṭas or Cocks suffers in the Kṛmipūya hell (22.20).

Kumbhakāra - Panini mentions it in the gana kulālādi (Pān. IV.3.118). Usanas (32-33) says that he is the offspring of a Clandestine union of a brahmin with a vaśya female. Devala quoted in Parāśara Mādhāvīya (II.1.P.431) includes the potter among the Śūdras. He is called 'Kumbhāra' in Gujarati. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.)

Kundakāra - The meaning of the word Kunda is given as a 'turner's lathe' and that of 'Kundakāra' as a turner. Therefore, it seems that some people maintained themselves by turning lathes. Even at present the sharpening of iron razors and knives is done on the turner's lathe. The Br. P. mentions it along with others (44.36).

58 22.24, missing in the ms. 'kha'.
60 Kane P.V., Op.Cit., P.78.
Kundayī - One who is supported by an adulterine.\(^{62}\)

According to Manu (III.174) a Kunda is the offspring of a clandestine intercourse between a married brahmana woman whose husband is living and a brahmana male.\(^{63}\) The Br. P. states that a Kundāsī brahmin falls down from his high status (223.30). Again it is stated that a 'Kundāsī' falls in the Rudhirāndha hell (22.21).\(^{64}\)

Lāksāvīkṛetā - The Br. P. states that one who sells Lāksā, i.e. a kind of red dye or lac obtained from the conchineal or a similar insect as well as from the resin of a particular tree\(^{65}\) suffers in the Kṛ mipūya hell (22.19).

Lavajīva - One who maintains himself in the bird called Lāva or quails is called a Lāvajīva (44.38).

Lavānājīvin - One who maintains himself by selling salt (44.33). The Br. P. also states that a Lavānāvīkṛetā, i.e. one who sells salt suffers in the Kṛ mipūya hell (22.19).

Lohakāra - Nārada recommends utilising the services of an ironsmith who is so by caste in the fire ordeal.\(^{66}\)

\(^{62}\) Monier Williams, Ibid., PP. 289-90.
\(^{64}\) The Hindi translation of the Br.P., Op.Cit., translates the word 'Kundāsī' as 'Dogaleka anna khānevalā'.
Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Lubdhaka - The Lubdhaka is the same as Vyādha mentioned by Sumantu in Aparārka P. 1176. The Br. P. mentions the hunter jarā at whose hands lord kṛṣṇa met his death (211.5). The Br. P. also identifies the Vyādha and the Lubdhaka (80.6,27).

Madhuḥa - A madhuḥa or one who destroys the bee-hives suffers in the Vaitaranī (22.23).

Madhvīvikravaka - The Br. P. states that one who sell Mādhvi, i.e. a kind of intoxicating liquor suffers in the taptaloha hell (22.11).

Magadhā - The opinion is divided among the scholars regarding his origin. Usānas (7-8) says that he becomes the bandin of brahmins and kṣatriyas, he maintains himself by lauding or as a messenger or servant of a vāisyā. Pāññini (IV.1.70) derives the word Māgadhā from the country Māgadhā, but apparently not in the sense of a caste.67 The Br. P. states that along with the Sūta, the Māgadhā too was created from the sacrifice at the time of king Prathu's birth and they were requested to eulogise king Prathu but as they did not know about Prathu's greatness they were asked to eulogise king

67 Ibid., PP. 90-91.
Prthu as he would be in the future and from that time onwards they were employed to bestow blessings. They are called 'Bandins' and the country Magadha was given to them (4.61-68).

Mahisika - The Br. P. states that one who maintains himself on buffaloes suffers in the Rudhirandha hell (22.21).

Malakara - The Vedavyasasapti (I.10-11) includes the Malakara among the Sudras along with barbars, potters and others. The Br. P. mentions the maker of garlands in the list of the ms. 'kha' (14.28 ff.).

Malla - Manu (X.22) states that it is another name of Jhalla. He is a wrestler or boxer by profession and is the offspring of an outcaste kshatriya by a kshatriya female who was previously the wife of another sub-caste. The Br. P. mentions him along with the Dutas, Kayasthas and others (44.37).

Mamsavikreta - The Br. P. states that one who sells flesh or meat suffers in the Kmsiphya hell (22.19). He is again referred to (44.33).

68 Ibid., P. 73.
Mangalanathaka - A blessing-reciter. There were some people who were professional well-wishers or panegyrists (44.34).

Manikara - According to Usanas (39.40) he is the offspring of a clandestine union between a kṣatriya male and a vaiśya female and he gains his livelihood by working on beads, by-performing pearls and dealing in coral and conches. According to the sūtasamhitā he is the clandestine offspring of a vaiśya male from a vaiśya female. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms.'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Mārjaranogaka - The Br. P. states that one who maintains cats goes to the Kṛṣṇipūya hell (22.20).

Matsyavikrayin - Some people maintained themselves by selling fish. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.). According to Usanas (44), a Matsya-bandhaka is an offspring of a taksakā from a kṣatriya woman.

Megapala - Some people were shepherds (44.32).

Mleccha - According to the sūtasamhitā he is the offspring of a clandestine union of a brahmin woman and a vaiśya male.70 The Br. P. states that lord Brahmā created the Mlecchas along with the four castes and others (45.35).

Mrgapaīa - Some people maintained themselves by rearing animals or deer (44.32).

Mrgavādha - It is stated that a hunter suffers in the Vahmijvala hell (22.25).

Mrgaṇa - The Br. P. includes the hunter among the Paniktidūsaka brahmins and prohibits him from being invited at a śrāddha ceremony (220.135).

Mrgaṇijaṭā - There were some people who maintained themselves on animals (44.33).

Mudgakara - The meaning of the word 'mudga' is 'Phaselous mungo', 'a cover' or a kind of sea-bird.71 The meaning of the word Mudgakara seems to be one who makes covers or lids. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Makṣatrasucaka - The Br. P. states that a Makṣatrasucaka, i.e. a star-indicator or an astrologer, suffers in the Kṛmipūya hell (22.18). Elsewhere he is included among the paniktidūsaka brahmins (220.134). Both these examples show that an astrologer was not considered to be a respectable man by profession.

Nāpita - A barber. Usanas (32.34) and Vaikhnānasā (X.12) say that he is the offspring of a clandestine affair between a brāhmaṇa male and a vaiśya female. Parāśarā (XI.21) says that the offspring of a brahmin from a śūdra girl is called Dāsa if sāṃskāras are performed on him, but if they are not performed he becomes a Nāpīta. There is a difference of opinion among the śastra-kārās regarding the meaning of Nāpīta to be either ārdhva-nāpīta or the adho-nāpīta?2 The Br. P. mentions him along with others (44.32).

Naravaidya - A doctor (44.39).

Nartaka - According to Usanas he is the offspring of a rānjaka from a vaiśya woman and his profession is that of a singer. Bṛhaspati quoted in Parāśara Mādhavaṇīya (II. Part I, P.380) separately mentions the same verse Naṭa and Nartaka.73 The Br.P. mentions him along with singer, Maṅgalapāthaka, Saṅlūṣa and others (44.34). At one place the Br. P. mentions Naṭas and Nartakas together (47.67).

Naṭa - He is one of the seven Antyajas. Hārita quoted by Aparārka (P.279) distinguishes between Naṭa and Saṅlūṣa and Aparārka remarks that Naṭa is a specific caste while Saṅlūṣa though not a nāta by caste makes his living by ganging on the stage. The Br. P. states that the Natas, Nartakas and those expert in singing came to celebrate the sacrifice of king Indradyumna (47.67).

73 Ibid., P.85.

Nisāda - Opinion is divided as regards the origin of the varṇa Nisāda. The Br. P. states that the Nisidas, dark and dwarfish, were produced from the left hand of king Vena and they dwelt on the Vindhya (4.43-47). The Vāyu Purāṇa (Vol.II, Ch.I, 120-121) and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (IV.14.42 ff.) tell the same story.

Paksyupālīvin - Some people maintained themselves on birds (44.38).

Parākāra - The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.). The meaning is not clear.

Parvakāra - The word 'Parvakāra' is taken to mean 'making arrows' or 'putting on a fine dress' whereas the word 'Parvakārin' is taken to mean one who for the sake of gain performs on common days such ceremonies as should be performed only on festivals. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.). Elsewhere he is included among the Pāṅktidūṣaka brahmans (220.134).

---

75 Ibid., PP. 86-87.

Patravikravin - Some people maintained themselves by selling leaves (44.31).

Pavaka - The meaning seems to be one whose occupation is to purify metals like gold, silver, etc.(44.36).

Phalavikravin - Some people maintained themselves by selling fruit (44.31).

Pulkasa - According to the Baud. Dh. S. (I.9.14) and Manu (X.13) he is the offspring of a Nisâda male from a Sudra female. Opinion is divided among the Śastrakāras about his origin. The Br. P. refers to Pulkasa along with cāndāla (240.31). Elsewhere it is stated that one who offers śrāddha with the money obtained through injustice does not satisfy his ancestors suffering in the birth of a Pulkasa (229.93).

Puranarthevisārada - There were some people who were proficient in explaining the meaning of the purāṇas (44.34).

Rājabhata - The Br. P. states that one who kills a Rājabhata suffers in the Taptakumbha hell. The 'Rājabhata' here seems to mean 'the royal messenger'. (22.10).

77 Ibid., PP. 88-89.
Rajaka - According to Vaikhānas (X.15) and the Sūtasaṃhitā he is the offspring of a Pulkasa or a Vaideha from a brāhmaṇa woman, while according to Usānas (18) he is the offspring of a Pulkasa male from a vaisya girl. Dhobi is a scheduled caste in U.P., Bihar and C.P. in Bengal.78 The Br. P. mentions it along with others (44.31).

Rāngopajīvin - One who maintains himself on colour. Here it may mean either a dyer or a painter (44.30). According to Usānas (19) a Rañjaka or a dyer is an offspring of a clandestine union of a śūdra male and a kṣatriya female.79 The Br. P. states that a Rāngopajīvin suffers in the Rudhirāndha hell (22.21,22).

Rāsvikretā - The Br. P. states that one who sells Rasa, i.e. syrup or liquor seller or a dealer in essence or spices suffers in the Kṛmipūya hell (22.18,19).

Ratnadūṣavītā - One who spoils the jewels or scratches them suffers in the Kṛmibhaksya hell (22.19).

Ratnapariksaka - There were some people who were experts in discriminating the various qualities and types of jewels (44.35).

Rupakara - The meaning is 'dyer', one who gives form or colour to the cloth (44.38).

Ruthaka - The Br. P. mentions it along with others (44.36). The meaning is not clear.

Sailusa - Viṣṇu Dharma Sūtra 51.13, Manu IV.214, Harita quoted by Aparārka P.279, distinguish him from Raṅgavatārī and the Br. P. (quoted by Aparārka P.1178) defines him as one who finds out employment for nāṭas, and also defines the Raṅgavatārīn as a nāṭa who goes on the stage for livelihood and who introduces various changes in his appearance and dress. Both these definitions are not met with in the present Br. P. but it mentions Sailusa along with others (44.34).

Saktuvikravāra - Some people maintained themselves by selling barley-meal (44.33).

Sakunñi - One who maintains himself by showing omens goes to the Rudhirāṇḍha hell (22.22).

Sandha - The Br. P. states that one should purify himself after seeing a eunuch (221.142).

---

80 Vṛttyāṅveṣi nāṭānām tu sa tu sailūṣakāḥ smrtaḥ Brahma Purāṇa quoted by Aparārka, P.1178.

81 Br. P. quoted by Aparārka, P.1178, vide Kane, P.97.
Sarakartə - The Br. P. states that one who prepares arrows suffers in the Vedhaka hell (22.16).

Silpin - Some people were artisans and craftsmen. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Somavikravyin - The Br. P. states that one who sells Soma, i.e. Somarasa suffers in the Rudhirāndha hell (22.22). Again it is stated that a Somavikrayī brahmin falls down from the status of his high birth (223.30). Elsewhere the Somavikravyin is included among the pahktidūsaka brahmans (220.132).

Sraumkravln - Some people maintained themselves by selling garlands. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.30 ff.).

Surādhūtopejiyin - Some people maintained themselves by distilling spirituous liquor or wine, i.e. by keeping taverns (44.37). Visnu Dh.S. 51.15, Manu IV.216, Yāj.II.48 and the Brahma puraṇa (quoted by Aparārka P.1177) mention the Saundika or wine-seller but the word is not met with in the present Br. P.

Sūta - According to Gautama (IV.15), Baud. Dh. S. (I.9.9), Vas. (18.6), Kautilya (III.7), Manu (X.11), Nārada (Strīpuṣa 110), Viśnu Dh. S. (16.6), Yaj. (I.93) and Sutasamhitā, he is a pratiloma sprung from a kṣatriya male and a brāhmaṇa woman. Kautilya is careful to add that the sūta who figures in the pūrāṇas as the reciter is quite different from this. The Br. P. states that the sūtas were created from sauti - the sacrificial altar - in order to praise the good deeds of king Prthu and they were given the region Anūpadesa (4.60-67).

Śvadhākāra - Some people followed the occupation of making axes or knives. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.23 ff.).

Śvāṃkāra - He is one of the Antyajas. According to the Baud. Dh. S. (I.9.12), Kautilya (III.7), he is the offspring of an ugra male from a female of the kṣattra sub-caste, while according to Manu (X.19) he is the offspring of a kṣattra male from an ugra female. Vaiśṇavas (X.15) and Sutasamhitā say that he is the offspring of a cāṇḍāla male and a brāhmaṇa female while according to Uṣanas (11) he is the offspring of a cāṇḍāla male from a vaisya woman. The

83 Ibid., P.98.
84 Ibid., P.97.
Br. P. states that as Satyavrata, king Trayyaruna's son, carried away a maiden from her wedding hall he was abandoned by his father and was asked to live with the svapakas (7.97-103). The Svapāka is again mentioned along with the cāndāla and Pulkasa (240, 31).

Svaposaka - It is stated that one who maintains dogs suffers in the Kṛnipūya hell (22, 20).

Svarṇakara - According to Viśnu Dh.S. (X.4) and Nārada (Kṣadāna 274) a goldsmith or a dealer in bronze or a baniya who was to examine the balance in the balance ordeal. Manu (IX, 293) condemns him as the worst of all rogues. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Tailenāṭhaka - The meaning is not clear. The Br. P. mentions it along with others (44.38).

Tailavikrayaka - Some maintained themselves by selling oil (44.30).

Taittirika - There were some people who maintained themselves by catching partridges (44.38).

Tāmbulīnayajīvin - One who maintains himself by selling betels. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.30).
Tamrakāra - According to Usanas (14), a copper-smith is the offspring of an ayogava from a brāhmaṇa woman. The Br. P. mentions it along with others (44.36).

Tantuyāva - The weaver is mentioned in the Viṣṇu Dh. S. (51.13) and Saṅkha quoted by Aparārka P.1175. He is regarded as a śūdra by the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini II.4.10 and as excluded from sacrificial rites. The Br. P. mentions him along with others (44.38).

Tilavikretā - It is stated that one who sells sesamum suffers in the Krāmpūya hell (22.19).

Toyavikrayaka - Some people maintained themselves by selling water. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Tryavikrayaka - Some people maintained themselves by selling grass (44.29).

Tumbikāra - One who prepares gourds. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Ugra - According to Manu (X.9), Baudhāyana Dh.S. (I.9.5), Kaṭāḥila III.7, Yājñavalkya I.32, and Anusāsana 48.7 he is an anuloma offspring of a ksatriya male from a śūdra woman while according to Usanas (verse 41) he is the offspring of the union of a brahmin with a śūdra woman. 85 The Ugra, according to Manu X.9 is of cruel or rude conduct and employment, as killing or catching snakes, etc., but according to the tantras he is an encomiast or bard. 86 The Br. P. states that one should not take food from an Ugra (223.22).

Vadhypāla - The Br. P. states that a Vadhypāla, i.e. one who keeps watch over the animals and victims to be killed suffers in the Taptaloka hell (22.11). The Br. P. (quoted by Aparārka, P.1177) states that a śunika or śaunika i.e. a butcher is a 'Pusumāraka'. But it is not found in the present Br. P.

Vāhaka - One who does the business of a carrier or a porter. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms.'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Vaidya - The doctors were there (44.39).

Varāhanosaka - The Br. P. states that one who maintains boars suffers in the Kṛmipūya hell (22.20).

Vārdhusi - The Br. P. includes a Vārdhusi or the usurer among the panktidūśaka brahmins (230.132).

Vartika - One who maintains himself on 'Vartika' or 'quails' (44.38).

Vastrasucaka - According to Usenas (V.43) he is an anuloma born of the marriage of a vaisya male from a sudra female and 'Sucika' according to Vaikhanas (X.15) and Usanas (V.22) is a pratiloma, offspring of a Vaidehaka from a kshatriya woman and engages in the work of sewing with a needle. Saucika, according to the lexicon of Amara, is the same as Tunnavaya and the Br. P. quoted by Aparartha (P.1178) also equates suci with Tunnavaya. Though this reference is not found in the present Br. P.s, there is a reference to 'Vastrasucaka' meaning a tailor (44.32). Elsewhere the Br. P. states that a suci suffers in the Rudhirandha hell (22.21).

Vastravikrayaka - One who sells clothes (44.30).

Vedavikrayaka - One who sells vedas suffers in Sabala hell (22.13).

Vetrakara - There were some people who made things from reed. The Br. P. mentions it in the list of the ms. 'kha' (44.28 ff.).

Vihahgosaka - The Br. P. states that one who maintains the birds suffers in the Kraipuya hell (22.20).

87 Kane P.V., O.Cit., P.98.
Visaghna - Those who are skilled in destroying or counteracting the effects of poison (44.35).

Vṛksavaidya - One who is an expert in the science related to trees (44.39).

Vyādha - The Br. P. describes a hunter who was a staunch devotee of lord Śiva (A.169). He is the same as Lubdhaka. See 'Lubdhaka'.

Vvokara - There were some people who followed the occupation of blacksmiths (44.36).

Social Mobility

The phenomenon of the mixed caste is one of the important topics connected with the discussion of varṇa. The word varṇasamkara means mixture of castes by intermarriages. The Br. P. does not throw much light on the varṇasamkara brought about by the inter-caste marriages but it deals at length with the Jātyūkṣa or Jātyapakṣa based on the mode of behaviour that one follows in life.

The Br. P. starts the discussion by raising the questions as to by the performance of which type of actions does a brahmin, or a kṣatriya, or a vaisya or a śudra can be changed to the three castes other than its own. How can Dharma be directed into the pratiloma direction? (223.3,7-11).

The answers given to the above doubts form the views of the Brahma purāṇa regarding the Jatyutkāraṣa and the Jatypakāraṣa of the people. Thus it states that the Brahmins, the kṣatriyas, the vaśyas and the śudras get their respective status by their very nature. If a brahmin commits sins, he slips from his status and deteriorates. A brahmin who maintains himself by following his own duty gets the Brahmabhāva but one who abandoning the brahminhood follows the duties apropos to a kṣatriya gets birth among the kṣatriyas. If brahmin adhering to greediness and moha follows the duties of the vaśya, he gets birth among the vaśyas and if he performs actions proper to a śudra he becomes a śudra. After slipping off from his own caste, he falls down from the Brahmaloka too and after suffering in hell gets a birth among the śudras. Similarly, if the kṣatriya and vaśya also maintain themselves by following the duties proper to a śudra, they too become śudras (223.12-20).

A brahmin who dies with the food of a śudra in his belly becomes a śudra. A brahmin gets that birth by whose food he maintains himself. A brahmin who ignores the duties proper to a brahmin and eats the uneatables falls from his high status (223.24-26).

A südra who performs all the actions according to the śātric injunctions, who takes the food remaining after the reception of his guests, who serves the higher classes, never thinks evil of others, always treads the right path, worships the gods and brahmīns, is always ready to give reception to all the people, has intercourse with his wife in the Ṛtukāla, dines punctually and eats the food remaining after that eaten by the learned men and the sages, never eats meat, gets the birth of a vaisya (223.32-36).

A vaisya who being truthful, Nirdvandva, expert in Sāmaveda, being holy and addicted to svādhyāya performs sacrifices, does not see faults of others, eats twice a day, who controlling the diet has become desireless and void of Ahamkāra and who performing the Agnīhotra, eats the remaining portion of the food after the performance of the sacrifice becomes a kṣatriya (223.37-41).

After getting the birth of a kṣatriya he gets good samskāras by his very birth. After upanayana he remains engrossed in the observance of the Brāhmaṇavrata. He gives dāna, performs sacrifices and studying the vedas, performs the three rites of the three sacrificial fires, viz. Āhavaniya and others with a view to attain heaven. If he is a king he should give dāna, maintain the subject righteously, remain truthful, follow the Trivarga, viz. Dharma, Artha and Kāma, control the senses, take just the 1/6th portion of the income of the subject, approach his wife during the Ātukāla, observe fasts regularly, receive guests, should always be ready to feed the śūdras, worship gods, pītrās and guests, give bhikṣa to the Bhikṣus, should perform the Agnihotra twice a day and give up his life in battle for the protection of cows and brahmans. Thus by performing the three types of sacrificial fires and becomes in another birth a brahmin well-versed in the vedas. Thus by performing higher types of actions one gets a birth in the higher category. And even if a brahmin by birth eats the food of the mixed castes he becomes a śūdra (223.42-56).

Thus it is neither the birth, the samskāras, the study of vedas or the progeny that is the cause of the birth in the category of a brahmin but the main reason of brahminhood is sadācāra (223.56,57).

A brahmin who did not study the vedas was considered to be equal to a śūdra (111.7,8).

Thus the Br. P. represents a stage when efforts were made to raise the status of the group on the social ladder by diverse means e.g. by what Dr. M.N. Srinivas calls the Sanskritizing of one's ritual process or by westernizing some modes of life.\(^{89}\)

Besides the above discussion, the Br. P. provides some instances of social mobility which are of absorbing interest as they are reminiscent of a stage when the rules of caste movement were lax and naturally these instances date back to an early period.\(^{90}\)

Prasadhra, a ksatriya, was cursed to be a sudra by his preceptor as a punishment for his sinful act of killing the cow (7.43). The ksatriya, brahmins also present a notable instance of social mobility for they were real brahmins with the ksatriya status superadded. There is no suggestion that there was any difficulty in the assumption of brahminhood in such cases.\(^{91}\) The Br. P. states that two sons of Nabhaga and Ariṣṭa though vaiṣyas became brahmins (7.42). There are abundant instances of kings becoming Rṣis without any difficulty and that was tantamount to becoming brahmins.\(^{92}\)

\(^{89}\) Srinivas M.N.: Religion and Society among the Coorgs of South India, pp. 30-31; vide also 'A note on Sanskritization and westernization'. The Far Eastern Quarterly, Vol. XV, No. 4, August 1956, pp. 481-496; Ghurye G.S., Caste and Class in India, Ch. VII.

\(^{91}\) AIHT, pp. 244-245.

\(^{92}\) Ibid., p. 244.
Br. P. states that Visvāmitra attained the covetable status of a Brahmarṣi by the power of his severe penance (10.54-56). Elsewhere it is stated that two sons of Nābhāga and Ariṣṭa though vaisya became brahmans (7.42).

These instances suggest that various processes such as penance, curse adoption, etc. brought about this phenomenon. The process of penance sometimes brought about an upward movement, the target in this case was the attainment of the much coveted status of a brahmin, while the process of curse led to the degradation of a person concerned to an abominable status of a sudra as a result of his censurable and diabolical deeds.93

The system of the Āśramas

The word Āśrama is originally derived from the root 'āram' to exert oneself and therefore it may mean (i) a place where exertions are performed and (ii) the action of performing such exertions.94 The Āśramas then are to be regarded as resting places during one's journey on the way to final liberation which is the final aim of life, each of the Āśramas constituting a stage of life in which the individual has to train himself for a certain period, and exert himself within the circuit of the same in order to qualify himself for the next. 95

Different views have been held regarding the number of Āśramas in initial stages of its development. Dr. P. M. Modi bases his arguments on CHU (2.23.1) and Manu smṛti (2.230; 7.73) and comes to the conclusion that in the beginning there were three Āśramas, 96 and from the same passage Prof. R. D. Ranade infers the firmly-laid-out foundations of the future Āśrama system. 97 Dr. Kane finds a somewhat obscure reference to the four Āśramas in the AB 33.11 98 and Prof. Deussen states that the oldest passage which names all the four Āśramas in their correct order is Jābāla up. 4. 99 Prof. Altekar concludes that "the system of the four Āśramas, Brahmacarya, Gr̄hastha, Vānaprastha and Samnyāsa, is no doubt now regarded as a very early and ancient feature of Hinduism, but its early history is shrouded in mystery. It is extremely doubtful

95 Prabhu P. N., Hindu Social Organization, P. 83.
96 Modi P. M., Development of the system of Āśramas; Proc. and Trans. of the Seventh All India Oriental Conference, Baroda, December, 1933 (1935), PP. 315-316.
whether the system was developed in the Vedic age.\textsuperscript{100}

According to Hindu view of life, the highest aim of mankind is not to be found in this worldly existence but in the world beyond and the whole of life of an individual is a kind of schooling and self-discipline; and during the course of this schooling he has to pass through four stages called the Āśramas; and the Hindu theory of the four purusarthas is given concrete expression in the Hindu scheme of āśramas. Thus in the Brahmaçaryāśrama it provides healthy restraint on the instinctive and impulsive life of man, and as Deussen says "it offers the opportunity in the stage of Grhastraha to enjoy life, and by enjoying it to convince oneself of its futility. It then, in an advanced stage, in the stage of Vanaprastha, tends to a systematic morification of sensuality and it describes the Sanyāsin a man who, approaching the end of his days, has become free from all worldly fetters and is best prepared for departure."\textsuperscript{101}

\textsuperscript{100} Altekar A.S., The Āśrama system; Ghurye Felicitation Volume, P.183, According to Dr.N.N.Law who substantiated Dr.Jacobi's view, 'the four stages of life were well developed at the time of the older upanisads and the mutual relations between them had been fixed before that period'. The Antiquity of the four stages of life (Āśramas) IA, Vol.52 (1923), P.272; vide also Kantawala S.G., Op.Cit., Ch.II.

Br. P. also expounds the four-fold system of the Āśramas.

It states that in the Sākadvipa, the varṇāśrama system is followed (20.35). In the Puskaradvipa it is not followed (20.16). It also states that in the Kaliyuga, people would be degraded from varṇa and āśrama. The nomenclature as employed in the Br. P. to denote the persons in the different stages of life is as follows:

(i) Brahmacārīn - A student
(ii) Gṛhastha - A house-holder.
(iii) Vānaprastha - A forest-hermit.
(iv) Bhikṣu or Yati - An ascetic.

(i) The Stage of a Brahmacārīn

An individual enters upon the first stage of life on the performance of initiation rites called upanayana (222.22). Upanayana initiates man into the disciplined life and that is why it is an important ceremony in the life of a twice-born. Then he has to reside at the teacher's house to study the vedas where he has to lead a disciplined life with good behaviour. He should bow down to the teacher and to his daily round of duties. He should perform the Sūrya-worship and the Agnihotra on both the Sandhyās. If 102 229,10; cf. also Mat. 144.73.

103 Kapadia K.M., Marriage and Family in India, P. 27.
the teacher remains standing, he should also stand and if the teacher goes somewhere, he should follow him, if the teacher sits, he should occupy a lower position. He should never act contrary to the wishes of the teacher and with his permission, he should study the Vedas. He should take a bath before the teacher takes it and should bring samidh and water for him and after completing the studies should give the Gurudakṣiṇā and with the permission of the teacher he should enter the Grhasthāśrama (222.23-25). The stage of studentship is marked by the rapid growth of the body, emotional instability, the development of sexual functions and the stimulation of sexual activities. It is a period of storm and stress of impulsiveness of strong self-expression.104 Thus this brilliant scheme of Āśramas provided a healthy check towards a balanced development of an adolescent.

The Stage of a Grhastha

After gaining the rich equipment of the stage of the Brahmaśarin, one should enter the stage of a Grhastha. The Br. P. emphatically states that though all the four Āśramas are the doors of karman, still the Grhasthāśrama is the best one among the four and by following its duties, one gains enjoyment as well as liberation (88.153). The MBh. also states that asceticism is attainable by leading the life of a householder upon which the proper order of everything depends and that the life of a householder is very superior and sacred and gives due scope for success (MBh. Santiparva 11.2 & 21). The smrtis also bestow the highest praise upon this āśrama, and states that all the āśramas subsist by receiving support from the Grhastha and since men in the three other āśramas are daily supported by the householder with sacred knowledge and food, his is the leading āśrama.105

After completing the stage of a Brahmacārīṇī, one should marry according to the proper rites and should earn money in accordance with one's karmans. He should then offer after worship the pītras by performing śrāddha, to gods by the performance of sacrifice, to guests by food, to munis by svādhyāya and to Prajāpati by the progeny (220.29,30). This in main corresponds to the concept of the Pañcamahāyājñas which is referred to as early as the SB (11.5.6.1) and the Tai Ā.(2.10). According to Manu these five Mahāyajñas were offered to Brahman, pītris, gods, bhūtas and men and Brahman was satisfied by the recitation of the vedas, pītris by tarpāṇa or śrāddha, gods by the burnt oblation, bhūtas by bali offerings and men by reception of guests. This concept of the Pañcamahāyaṇa widened the field of social duties by reorienting the purpose of Yajña and incorporating new Yajñas to men and to the bhūtas in the older concept of three debts, viz. that to sages, gods and manes.106

105 Manu iii. 78,79; vi. 89, 90.

He should offer an oblation to Viśvedevas in the honour of all the beings and should always speak truth. A Grhastha is the support of parivrāḍs and Brahmacārins who maintain themselves on bhikṣā and therefore too the Grhasthā-śrama is considered to be the best stage.107 A Grhastha is the resort of all such Brahmans who study veda, take a bath at a holy place, go round the world for tīrthayātrā, who have no house, who have not taken food, and who reside at the place where they are at the time of sunset. he should always welcome such brahmans with sweet speech. They should be given a seat and a bed and should be provided with food. A guest who returns from the house of a Grhastha disappointed takes away with him the merit of the Grhastha. A Grhastha should not ignore others, should not be egoistic, should not gossip about others, should not inflict pain on others, and should not speak harsh words. One who observes all these rules strictly, becomes free from all the bondages and goes to the highest world (220.30-38).

A Grhastha should perform the worship of gods, manes and guests with śikṣī ṛc̄a havya, havya and food. He should satisfy all the beings, family, animals, birds, ants, bhikṣus, travellers, and good brahmans. He should always act with righteousness and should try to attain liberation, the final puruṣārtha by following the paths of Dharma, Artha and Kāma. He should keep one-fourth of his income for spending over the other-worldly affairs, half of the income should be spent in the maintenance of one's own self and in the performance of the nitya and naimittika karmans and the fourth part should be kept aside as stable income. This shows how economy was valued even in those days and money was spent according to the purpose it served (221.1-11). The Br.P. provides a list of commands to be observed by a Grhastha as he has to behave righteously, according to sadācāra (A.221). See section 'Popular Superstitions' of the chapter V on 'Social and Economic Life'. The Grhastha's life thus is a life of selfless service and dedication of his best and utmost for his elders, children, wife and other members of his family, his dependants and strangers through his acts of fulfilling his social obligation. 108

The Stage of a Vānaprastha

An individual in this third stage gives up his fields of Artha and Kama by leaving his near and dear ones, his family, his village and by abandoning his belongings and possessions, he now goes out in the forest, where by meditation and service of others, he trains himself up for the execution of the final yajña that awaits his soul pasturing in the last āśrama.

The Br. P. states that when a Gṛhaustha reaches old age, he should ask his sons to protect his wife or he should take his wife with him to the forest. There he should eat leaves, roots and fruits and should lie on the ground (222.39,40). As this stage was a preparation of final renunciation of family ties and social relations, he was asked to satisfy his hunger by the roots and fruits available in the forest and in course of time by whatever accidentally fell within his reach and still later by water or air.¹⁰⁹ He had to minimise his physical needs and thus he was asked to wear a cloth made up of leather or grass and he was neither to cut his hair nor shave. He should consider all the beings as guests. He should take a bath thrice a day. He should worship the deities, perform the sacrifices, honour the guests, offer the oblations and maintain himself on begging the alms. He may apply the oil of wild vegetables to his body. His main function consists in practising penance and the suffering of duels like Sita and uṣṇa. A Vanaprastha who thus acts according to the proper rules extinguishes all his sins and gets the external worlds (220.39-45). Thus the life of a hermit is a life dedicated to the pursuit of the welfare of the community as a disinterested and detached individual and at the same time it was a life of inquiry and searchings, a life devoted to meditation and contemplation, to realize the true being of oneself.\textsuperscript{110}

\textbf{The Stage of a Bhikṣu or a Yati}

With the equipment of the above three stages, one has to enter on the last stage, the life of an ascetic. This last āśrama provides the fullest opportunities for the self-expression and self-expansion consisting of a complete offering of the self wherein the self, out of a will and purpose to be perfect, surrenders all that was nearest and dearest to his lower ego, in order that thereby and thereafter he may be enabled to be one with the real self, the ātman.\textsuperscript{111}

\footnotesize
The Br. P. states that a Bhikṣu should give up attachment for sons, wealth and affection. Being free from envy, he should enter the fourth āsrāma. He should give up all the actions belonging to the three castes and should have equal feelings for friend as well as foe as for all the beings. He should harm neither the Jarāyuja nor the andaja even mentally. He should not stay for more than a day in a village and for more than five nights in a city. He should neither be attached nor be cruel with the birds. He should go to beg the alms in noble families at the time when the members have been extinguished and when the people have finished their meals, let him not be sorry when he obtains nothing, nor rejoice when he gets something. Let him accept so much only as will sustain life. He should never be addicted to passions. Let him not have much reception because on getting much reception, an ascetic though free from other bondages, binds himself. An ascetic should move at all the places giving up kāma, anger, egoism, greediness and infatuation. One who moves on earth giving a promise of fearlessness to others never incurs fear for himself. One who establishes agnihotra in himself and who keeps the food in the form of haviṣya in his mouth goes to the highest worlds. A brahmin who observes this mokṣa-āsrāma according to the rites prescribed in śāstras goes to the peaceful and brilliant Brahmaloka like the fire lighted without fuel.\textsuperscript{112} Thus now fully realizing the peace and meaning of the self in the midst of samsāra he brings himself face to face with the final aim of all existence, viz. mokṣa, in this last āśrama.\textsuperscript{113}

Besides the above, the Br. P. mentions the people of the four āśramas as witnessing the sacrifice conducted in the Naimīśaranyā (1.8,9), Puruṣottamakṣetra (47.32) and in connection with kṛṣṇa-worship (65.9,10,17) and Sun-worship (30.54).

And as MM, Dr. P.V. Kane states 'the theory of varṇa dealt with man as a member of the Āryan society and laid down what his rights, functions, privileges, responsibilities and duties were as a member of that society. It was addressed to man in the mass. The theory of āśramas addressed itself to the individual. It tells him what his spiritual goal is, how he is to order his life and what preparations are required to attain that goal. The theory of āśramas was truly a sublime conception\textsuperscript{114} and Deussen highly appreciates it as one which the entire history of mankind has not produced much that approaches the grandeur to this thought\textsuperscript{115} and as

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{112} (223.49-57), cf. also Manu (6.41 ff.).
\item \textsuperscript{113} Prabhu P.N., Op.Cit., P.39.
\item \textsuperscript{114} Kane P.V., B.D.S., Vol.II, P.423.
\item \textsuperscript{115} Deussen P., The Philosophy of the Upanisads, (Tr.by Geden, 1906), P.367.
\end{itemize}
Dr. Prabhu puts it 'The two organisations of the Asrama and the varṇa, which, to put it briefly, refer to the problems of the nurture and the nature of man, rightly serve as the corner-stones of the Hindu theory of social organisation and that the scheme of the āśramas as thought out by the Hindus is a unique contribution in the whole history of the social thought of the world, without even a parallel to it in any other thought system, excepting perhaps, to some extent, in Plato's the Republic.\textsuperscript{116}

System of Education

After examining the varṇa system and the asrama-system it is necessary to examine the system of education which influences life in its formative period, viz. the Brahmacaryāsrama,

As Penunzio states "The primary function of the educational system is to transmit a knowledge of the forms and skills society regards as indispensable to its survival and improvement. That system regularises the knowledge transmitting activity, inculcates the folkways and the mores, trains the young to fit into the established cultural scheme, aims to aid the individual in the development of personality and aptitudes, sets forth the broad lines which the society believes must be followed in order to survive and improve.

\textsuperscript{116} Prabhu P.N., Op.Cit., P.75.
When, however, we proceed to discuss the conception and aims of education, we use the term in its narrower sense as denoting the instruction and training which a youth receives during his studenthood before he settles down to his career or profession.

The Br. P. does not throw light on all the aspects of education, but a rough picture of the educational system of the Brahmanical type can be obtained by gathering the stray references from the Br. P.

(i) Position and duties of the Student

The period of studentship was looked upon not only as a time of learning, but as a time of rigorous discipline. The Upaniṣads provide instances where no teaching was given for several years after studentship had begun, though they may be exceptional cases. The Br. P. states that a student who comes from a good family, adheres to righteousness, engrossed in serving the elders, self-reliant, clever in

---

117 Penunzio, C., Major Social Institutions, P. 242.
118 Altekar A.S., Education in Ancient India, P.4.
119 Keay F.E.: Indian Education in ancient and later times, P.20.
120 Upakosala in Ch. Up. IV.10.1,2; Satyaskāma in chand up. IV.4.5; also vide Das Santosh Kumar; The education system of the ancient Hindus, PP. 73-78.
grasping and speaks truth is a good student (121.9,10) but the accompanying remarks that such a student can be available as a result of great merit, shows that the general standard of students did not remain so high. The secret doctrines were considered to be highly purificatory and therefore were not to be given to any Tom and Harry. They were not to be given to one who is impure, mean-minded, who has no pupil, who does not observe any vows, who is ungrateful and who is not a well-wisher (4.2.5).

The conditions and duties of studentship were residence in the teacher's house, tending the sacred fires, begging the alms, tending the teacher's house, serving the teacher by word, mind and deed and others of a similar type. The Br. P. also lays down the same duties as can be seen from a description of the Brahmacaryaśrama (222.21-25). For further details vide the previous section on the system of Áśramas.

Though, equal opportunities were offered to all students, still ugliness in form tended to deprive a person from enjoying all the facilities, and an ugly student was very ashamed to study with his co-students (107.3-4).

Position and importance of Teacher

The success and achievements of an educational 121 Das, Ibid., PP. 78-84.

system depend to a large extent on the ideals that animate the teacher and student, the qualifications of the teacher, the position that was accorded to him in the society and the nature of relationship that existed between him and his students, have a vital bearing on the success or failure of the educational system.

Since the earliest times India has attached great importance to the teacher. He is to be venerated and worshipped, honoured and respected and his command is never to be disobeyed. The Br. P. also assigns a very high position to the teacher. Before starting any work, one used to bow down to god and teacher (I.28,29). When the teacher comes, a seat should be offered to him (221.31).
Without a good teacher, it was very difficult to achieve anything.122 Again it is stated that out of many teachers, one who bestows knowledge is great.123 Further it is stated that the Vyāsas in the future would be created to establish the authority of vedas, to abolish unrighteousness, to benefit the worlds, to achieve Dharma, Artha and Kāma, to decide the meaning of purāṇa, śārī, veda and Dharmaśāstra (158.31-35).

122 Na Siddhim kvāpi keśām cidvīnā sadguruṇā yataḥ |158.21
123 Guravāḥ santi bahavāteśāṁ jñānaprado mahān | 158.36.
The exaltation of the teacher was raised to such a position of reverence that he was worshipped by the pupil. If any wrong had been done either to him or to his possessions, the student was cursed. Thus the Br. P. notes that Prṣadhra, a kṣatriya, was cursed to become a sūdra as he killed the cow of his teacher (7.43).

One should never act contrary to the wishes of the teacher (221.30-31). The Br. P. furnishes an instance how the lives of some people were saved by their taking resort to the teacher of the enemy. Thus on Vasishtha's advice, king Sagara refrained from killing his enemies and released them after minor punishments (8.47). Again it is stated that one who abuses a teacher becomes degraded from the high status (223.31).

The Dharmasāstras lay down various rules regarding the respect due from a pupil to a teacher. The Br. P. also states that if the teacher remains standing, he also should stand, if the teacher walks, the students should follow and if he sits, the student should occupy a lower seat (222.21-25). The Āpastamba Dharmasāstra also lays down that a student should occupy a seat lower than the teacher. He was not to contradict his teacher, was to bring samidh and water for 124 Āpastamba, I.1.

the teacher, was not to take bath before his teacher and was to take his food brought by begging after his teacher's permission (221.21-25).

The teacher on his part was under the sacred obligation to fulfill his duty towards the pupil. He was to love his student as his own son and should not withhold any part of the teaching of the sacred science from him. The Br. P. also states that the relationship between a teacher and pupil was that between a father and a son or between an elder brother and younger one. If a teacher showed partiality for some student, it was considered to be a bad trait. A teacher should consider his student as his own son and if his son studies along with the other students, the teacher should not be partial to him.

Many students used to live under their teachers' roofs, and the affection which existed between the teacher and the taught must have often led to matrimonial connections, Later writers have prohibited a marriage with one's teacher's daughter but earlier practice seems to have been different.
The Br. P. states that the sage Bharadvaja after teaching his 125 Apastamba 1.2.

126 Brāhmaṇavaśunātpravaccāpi ściyāḥ syāt Guroh sada / 121.17.
127 Gurūnāṃ nesāhast atiṃ vaśāṃvaṃ putradisya yāvoh - 95.8.
student Kaţha all the rules asked him to marry his ugly sister Revatī. At first Kaţha vehemently protested against this relationship saying that the relationship between a teacher and pupil was like a father and son or an elder brother and younger brother and considering from that point of view Revatī was just like a sister to him. But Bharadvāja forced him to marry Revatī saying that it was his command and would be considered as Daksīna to the teacher from the student. From the above anecdote, it can be surmised that the student married the teacher’s sister though through no desire of his own, for the simple reason that he did not wish to displease his teacher (A.131).

At the same time, the Sr. P. states that to approach one’s teacher’s wife is a great sin (31.20). Candra was cursed by Bṛhaspati to be crooked as he carried away his wife Tārā (152.23). Dr. Altekar aptly remarks that the rule must have been intended to prevent complications likely to arise in practice, when many students used to live and board with their teachers.128

The qualifications of the teachers were that they were well-versed in Itihasa, purāṇa, veda, vedāṅga and sarvasāstras (I.28-29).

128 Altekar A.C., Ancient Indian Education, P.76.
Duration of the Course

There is general unanimity among the smrti-writers that the vedic education should extend over a period of 12 years. Though the Br. P. does not throw much light on the duration of the course, it states that Katha came to study different vidyās when he was sixteen years old and learnt puranas, vedas, smritis and Dharmasthānas (121.7-10). Again, krṣṇa and Balarama are said to have grasped the whole Dhanurveda within sixty-four days but this seems to be an exceptional case. It is stated that they had already known all the lores before hand but in order to fulfill the general rules of the world they had gone to study under the sage Sandipani and the sage himself was astonished on seeing them learning Dhanurveda so quickly and considered their act to be superhuman (195.13-22).

Fees

There was no fixed scale of monthly or sessional fees prescribed for the students of the different grades or classes in ancient India. It was the duty of the teachers to teach all qualified students free whether they be rich or poor and according to the Hindu theory the teacher's honorarium

189 Ibid., P.107.
becomes payable only when the whole course was over.\textsuperscript{130}

The Br. P. also states that one should give dakṣinā to the Guru at any cost. Even if the teacher desires an impossible thing, it should be given to him. One who after studying from the teacher does not satisfy him with the things he desires suffers in hell for an endless period,\textsuperscript{131} observing this rule, the sage Bharadvāja took advantage of his student Katha and asked him to marry his ugly sister Revati by way of paying the Gurudakṣinā as noted before (A.121).

The Br. P. furnishes another instance where an impossible thing is asked for by the teacher from the students by way of dakṣinā. Thus it is stated that when the sage Sāndīpani realised that kṛṣna and Balarama were extraordinary students as they had learnt the whole Dhamurveda with all its secrets within merely sixty-four days and that the knowledge of the astras was grasped by them in one hearing, the sage asked them to enliven his dead son who was carried away by the demon Pāncajana. Kṛṣna and Balarama fulfilled their teacher's wish by accomplishing the act with their superhuman powers (194.19-31).

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{130} Altekar A.S., Ibid., PP. 66-68.
\item \textsuperscript{131} Jocheyam dakṣinām dētum Guro tava manahpriyam Vadasva durlabhām va'pi Guro tubhyām nemo'stu te "Vidyām prāpyāpi ye mohātvasvagūroḥ parītōṣokam na prayacchanti nireyām te yāntyacandratārakam " 121.14,15.
\end{itemize}
The Gurukula System

The Gurukula system which necessitated the stay of the student away from his home at the house of a teacher or in a boarding house of established reputation, was one of the most important features of ancient Indian education.\textsuperscript{132}

The Br. \textit{P.} states that the student should begin to live under the supervision of his teacher after his upanayam (35.3-8). Again the rules which require the student to rise earlier and take bath earlier than the teacher, to show him am alms gathered at midday and to attend to the night service of his agnihotra, as noted above, also show that the student was normally living at the house of his teacher.

Direct, personal and continuous contact with a teacher of noble character naturally produces great effect on the mind of the scholar during the pliable period of childhood and adolescence.\textsuperscript{133} The Br. \textit{P.} notes an instance how a student was saved from complete deterioration by the teacher due to his personal care. Mahī, the wife of a brahmin Dhṛtavrata kept her son Sanjātā at the hermitage of the sage Gālava and became a prostitute. Unfortunately, when Sanjātā came of age, he enjoyed with the prostitute not knowing that she was his own mother. This illicit connection had a strange effect on his physical appearance. In the morning when he was going to the river, he was looking diseased and pus and blood were flowing from his body whereas after taking bath, he was shining like the Sun.

\textsuperscript{132} Altekar A.S., Education in Ancient India, P.30.
\textsuperscript{133} Altekar A.S., Ibid., P.32.

Sanjāta himself was not aware of the change in his outward appearance but when the sage Čālava noticed his dual forms, he called him and inquired carefully about his daily routine asking direct questions as to where he was going, what he was doing, what he was eating, what was the name of his wife, etc. Sanjāta thereupon inquired the prostitute as to who she was and when they knew their real relationship they expiated (A.92). This shows what a deep influence a teacher could create over a student's mind and how carefully he could observe the student if he stays near him for the whole period of studenthood.

The Br. P. notes the following hermitages of educational importance. The most important of such hermitages was that of the Naimiśa, a forest which was like a University. The Br. P. states that the ascetics living at Naimiśāraṇya were engaged in a sacrifice lasting for twelve years and held discourses on religious, philosophical and scientific topics. The other hermitages of importance were those of the sages Vasiṣṭha (8.45), Vīśvāmitra (7.105), Aurva (8.49), Sāndīpani (194.19), Gālava (92.4), Bharadvāja (121.9), Vālmīki (154.13) and Uttamka (7.61).

Courses of study, priestly and vocational

The curriculum is intimately connected with the achievements and aspirations of a people. Changes in the curriculum are inevitable with the changes in the outlook of life and with the development of new branches of knowledge.

We can get an idea as to how the system of education had developed from the references to the numerous vidyas mentioned in the Br. P. The Br. P. states that the students used to be taught vedas, vedāṅgas, purāṇas, śāstras, Itihāsas, Āgamas and Dharmasāstras (42.40-41), (43.35,38), (22.6), (44.10-12), (65.18). People in general also used to hear the purāṇas, Itihāsas, vedas with their aṅgas, kāvyas, śāstras, kathās, etc. (46.12). There is a reference to yogavidya by the power of which a person can be carried from one place to another (206.5).

Dhanurveda was considered to be a very high type of lore. Rāma, the son of the sage Jamadagni, was an expert in Dhanurveda (10.53). King Indradyumna (43.3), Candrama, Atri's son (152.2), kṛṣṇa and Balarama (195.21) also are said to be exports in Dhanurveda. In the curriculum arranged for kings, Dhanurveda was considered to be of primary importance (137.3). A prince's education consisted of Dhanurveda Astravidya, sastravidya and sāstras (104.32). Again it is said that a king was expected to be proficient in chariot-driving, elephant-riding and throwing the arrows (111.19).

People studied medicine. The names of various diseases like Headache (siroroga), A catarrah or cold (pratisyāya), fever (Mara), an acute pain or rheumatism (śūla), a fistula in the anus or pudendum (Bhagandara), a disease of spleen (Gulma), swelling or intumescence (śvaya-thuḥ), Asthma (śvasa), cold (śardi), eye-disease (Aksiroga), Dysentary (Atisāra), leprosy (Kuṣṭhāṅga), are referred to which show that the science of medicine, had highly developed. Elsewhere the diseases like headache (Sīrṣaroga), aksiroga, dantaśūla, Calagraha, Jalodara, atisāra, gandamāla, vicarcika, śvitrakūtha, Agnidagda, sidhma, and apasmāra (223.5,6) and gandapindaka (58.47) are mentioned. It is said that Dhanvantari, king Dhanu's son, who was a god incarnate in human form, learnt the science of Ayurveda from the sage Bharadvāja and dividing the science into eight parts, taught it to his pupils (11.36,39). Even at present a proficient doctor is colloquially called Dhanvantari. Again, it is said that one offering a śrāddha in Varuna nakṣatra gets success in medicine (220.42).

135 The meanings of the various Sanskrit words are given from V.S.Apte's 'The Practical Sanskrit - English Dictionary'.

Again about the Jyotiṣvidyā it is said that the sage Garga knew the whole Jyotiṣvidyā by worshipping Śeṣanāga (21.26-27).

Various other vidyās are referred to. It is said that the sage Viśvāmitra taught to Rāma and Laksmana the Māheśvarī Mahāvidyā, Dhanurvidyā, Śastravidyā, astravidyā, Rathavidyā, Laukikīvidyā, (chariot-driving), the science of elephants, Asvavidyā, Gadāvidyā and how to recite and release the mantras (123.97,98). Duryodhana is said to have obtained the knowledge of the Gadāvidyā from Balarāma (17.28). The hundred sons of king Kuvalāśva are said to be proficient in all the lores (7.57).

The Br. P. does not throw light on the varied aspects of education like punishments, holidays, method of teaching and others.