the spirit in which the present study has been put forward.

The study which draws heavily upon the pioneering work of Edward Denison was undertaken and completed at Department of Economics, Faculty of Arts, M.S. University of Baroda under the guidance of Prof. V.N. Kothari.

I cannot adequately express in words what I owe to Prof. Kothari. He has been my teacher since my undergraduate days and I remember with a deep sense of gratitude how he has all along been concerned with my progress. He has been my guide in a much wider sense of the term. But for his constant encouragement, inspiration and guidance, it is doubtful whether I would have been able to embark upon this long and arduous task of writing a doctoral dissertation and complete it in a period of about three years.

At this moment, I also remember with a deep sense of gratitude Prof. J.C. Sandesara who taught me at both the undergraduate and the post-graduate levels, and Prof. I.S. Gulati who taught me at the post-graduate level. Both of them took keen interest in my progress and encouraged me to pursue further study in economics.

Working in the Department of Economics at Baroda has all along been my pleasure and privilege, and for this I am grateful to the teachers and friends in the Department. Dr. M.M. Dadi and Dr. S.R. Hashim in particular took keen interest in my work and helped me by allowing me to have an access to some of their unpublished research work relating to the organised manufacturing sector in India.

Finally, I would like to thank Mr. C.N. Kachhia for seeing the manuscript through the final stage of typing and binding with utmost care and without any delay.
