The challenging process of writing this thesis has enriched my life and I feel blessed not only by these fictitious adolescents but by many whose names need to be placed on record.

My deepest gratitude to my supervisor Prof. Temsula Ao, Department of English, North-Eastern Hill University, for critically scrutinizing several earlier drafts, and whose years of wisdom and insightful comments, helped polish the rough edges. To her I owe suggestions that have been of inestimable value to me and from her interest and perceptive observations, I have drawn much encouragement.

My thanks are due to several libraries and their helpful personnel: North-Eastern Hill University Shillong, American Library, British Council Library and National Library Calcutta. I am indebted to the distinguished critics and novelists whose ideas I have used and whose names and works are listed in the Bibliography. I extend my thanks to the Principal of Synod College, Dr. D. Wanswett, for making adjustments and allowances so that I could complete my work. I also recall with gratitude all my friends who provided love and support and especially their sincere prayers. I owe a lot to my colleagues for taking care of classes and other assignments in order to give me the freedom to complete the formalities of thesis submission. Although it is not possible to name all, special mention must be made of Ms. Gayreen Lyngdoh for taking the trouble to note down points and suggestions made by the faculty members on the pre-submission day and for being there always. I am also grateful for the critical comments and specific suggestions of the faculty members of the English Department and the external expert from the Department of Philosophy, Prof. C.R. Agera. I thank Mr. Godfrey Pathaw for undertaking the job of printing the entire thesis with such painstaking care. However, full responsibility for the entire work, mistakes and all, is of course mine alone.

Most writings are done at home and although I realize such personal debts remain un-repayable, I’d like to thank my parents and family, for their endless phone calls and words of encouragement and prayers which helped smoothen the rough days. Special thanks go to my adolescent nieces and nephews and my dear students in college, for being the inspiration in the first place for undertaking this journey. I am grateful to my sister, Mrs. Susmita Neville who bridged the gap of distance by lending a helping hand in sending materials from Canada, diligently combing libraries and bookshops and for paying for registration in the online libraries like <www.questiacom> and <www.Enotes.com>.

My deepest love and gratitude go to my husband for giving me the space to pursue my dreams and gifting me a laptop as well as a crash course on the technicalities of using it. It made my work so much easier. I am grateful for his loving support and willing acceptance of the disruption in our routine home life on account of my literary pursuits.

Above all in my innermost being I heard the still small voice of God, constantly inspiring me with much needed illumination, wisdom and abiding joy, in my pursuit of knowledge. In closing I’d like to say that my perspective becomes no more than a single pebble, for as Don Crompton notes in his introduction to A View from the Spire, “records of experience… can only be one pebble in the artist’s larger mosaic.”
