Acknowledgements

Writing this thesis was a task that could not have been completed without the help of several individuals and therefore, I feel the need to thank so many at the end of it.

Firstly I acknowledge my supervisor, Professor Temsula Ao, whose understanding and generosity made it possible for me to continue under her supervision despite several slip-ups on my part. I am deeply indebted to her for providing her expertise, assistance, patience, and willingness to read through and correct multiple drafts of this work and for skillfully handling through sheer “mother-wit,” any technical snags that came up.

I am grateful to the Head of English Department, Professor Esther Syiem, for graciously granting me extension for the completion of this work and for her encouragement. Likewise, the kind comments and sympathetic words of support from some of the faculty members have buoyed my spirits.

To my colleagues in my own college I owe a great deal for the generous way in which they took care of my classes and other assignments in order to give me time to complete the formalities of thesis submission. Thank you, Zetso, Zeneinuo, Ajungla, and Khriezenuo. I also express gratitude to our Principal, C. Khalong, for giving us the freedom to make such an arrangement. Similarly, a special thanks to my colleagues in the Tenyidie Department who patiently and courteously repeated to me the intricacies of our own oral tradition. Their close association with this tradition validates the point I have tried to make, that in honouring the past, you honour the present.

The writing of this dissertation could not have begun without the assistance of three very enterprising persons who procured most of the important reading materials and references that have been essential to this work. They are: Shilloi in Hyderabad, Limala in New Delhi, and my sister, Bano in Kolkata, who all spent their precious time diligently combing their city’s libraries and using their extensive network of contacts in order to obtain these materials for me. My gratitude towards them knows no bounds.
To Mimi, special thanks for the loan of her laptop, and for sharing with me her own experiences of having undergone a similar venture thereby giving me extremely useful nuggets of information. I also express my appreciation to Johanna and Gus, for letting me share the comforts of their home in Shillong.

With gratitude, I acknowledge my mother, for her constant prayers and concern. My greatest indebtedness is to my husband, Labu, my children, Japu and Pele, and my grandchild, Gabriel. Although unspoken, their love, support and belief in me have been demonstrated through their patience and uncomplaining endurance of the many, many hours I could not give to them. The completion of this thesis expresses a part of my thankfulness to all of them.
