Acknowledgement

First and foremost, I would like to thank God with Whom all things are possible. At the very beginning I would like to express my deep and sincere gratitude to my supervisor, Dr. Kympham Sing Nongkynrih. His invaluable guidance, inexhaustible energy and immense patience, all fuelled by his incredible passion, and of course, his great sense of humour for those tedious hours, have made this challenging task a joy and a life lesson.

I would also like to thank the head of the department Dr. M. M. Mazumdar and the members of the faculty—Dr. S. Bhattacharjee, Prof. T. Ao, Dr. U. Sewa, Dr. M. Ranganathan, Mrs. Nola Syiem and Prof. E. Syiem—for the knowledge imparted to us during the course work and also their support and valuable input in the course of writing this dissertation. To have teachers of their caliber is indeed an honour. A special ‘thank you’ also goes to Kong Riti, Felis, Mercia and S. Dkhar, the office staff, for their assistance in all the needed work and their kind words of encouragement that greet me every time I go into their office to vent out my frustrations.

I would also like to thank all my colleagues and friends who have given me great support and help whenever required. A special mention also to those friends who have lent me their computers and laptops, for me to write my dissertation on, since mine crashed and remains ‘unfixable.’ I will remain forever indebted to your kindness and generosity.

Lastly, I would like to dedicate this thesis to my uneducated mother who understands the value of education more than anyone else.
