One of the most difficult problems involved in writing the present work was the scarcity and unreliability of research material. There is no comprehensive bibliography on the Naga insurgency (with geographical viewpoint). The material that has been collected in some instances has been co-related, while the absence of reliable material was felt throughout. For the benefit of succeeding research in the same theme a brief resume of source materials and problems, I have encountered is presented here.

Source:

The author has not attempted the use many of his sources, because either the facts presented by them was not substantive or the material they gave compel the author not to disclose his sources. Much of the material thus has to be treated secondary. Author's own pre-occupation and knowledge compels many of the sources as secondary in character.

The author has besides depended on the secondary sources for much of his information. National library in Calcutta, National Archive of India, New Delhi, and other libraries has been consulted at length. The analysis is purely author's viewpoint and it does not at any stage is reflection of government of India's viewpoint.
