ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is my proud privilege to complete this thesis under the able guidance of Professor Q.H. Farooq, Dean, Faculty of Commerce, who has been my teacher from the inception of my career as a student of commerce. In spite of his preoccupations, he gave me the liberty of encroachment on his valuable time. He guided me at all stages of the work and saved me from frustration. I owe him a great debt of gratitude for without his unfailing support this work would have not appeared in the present form.

I am also grateful to Prof. H.G. Fraine, Professor of Commerce, University of Wisconsin, Madison -6 (U.S.A.) for his able guidance, suggestions and criticisms. Prof. Fraine not only enriched me of the theoretical background of the subject but also provided key to many of the problems. My thanks are also due to Dr. F.H. Risvi, Reader in the Faculty of Commerce, M.U., Aligarh, for his suggestions and encouragement. I also desire to record my indebtedness to Prof. F.W. Paish of London School of Economics; Prof. H.C. Saurain, Professor of Finance, Stanford University; to Prof. M.D. Ketchum, Professor of Finance, University of Chicago and to Prof. G. Clayton of University of Liverpool for enlightening me with their learned views and by recommending the reading material on the subject.

My thanks are also due to Miss Ida Weber, Secretary, American Life Convention (Chicago), to Mr. Arthur C. Daniels, President of The Institute of Life Insurance Dr. James J. O'Leary, Director of Economic Research, Life Insurance Association of America (New York); Mr. John A Tuck, Managing Director and General Counsel, The Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association; Davis W. Gregg, President of the American College of Life Underwriters, (U.S.A); to the Secretary, Institute of Actuaries (London), Registrar, Chartered Insurance Institute, London; Secretary British Insurance Association (London); Mr. Harold F. Bell, Economic Adviser of Australia Mutual Provident Society; to the Public Relation Officer, L.I.C. and to a number of Research Institutes in India and abroad for sending me valuable research materials, reports and proceedings of their organisations.

I am also thankful to Mr. Basheeruddin, former Librarian, Maulana Azad Library for affording many facilities to complete this work. I also acknowledge with grateful thanks the valuable help of my colleague Mr. Azmat Ali and Mr. S.M. Zaki, Research Scholar, in the Faculty who read through the typescript minutely. I must confess here that whatever mistakes still remain in this thesis, I am solely responsible for them.

I am also highly indebted to the University authorities for granting me a sum of Rs 2,200 out of the Research Grant to complete this work.

I would be failing in my duties if I do not express my thanks to my friend, Mr. S.Nafis Ahmed Termisi, who has not only typed out my thesis but has also given me valuable suggestions for the improvement of this work.
