Plate 9. The sacrificial sword used by the early Sikh settlers of Barkola.

Plate 10. The banyan tree believed to have been planted by Subedar Ram Singh.
Plate 11. Two Sikh villagers of Barkola chatting on a village by-lane.

Plate 12. A Sikh villager exchanging news and views with two Koch villagers.
Plate 13. A Sikh cultivator and his son crushing sugarcane.

Plate 14. The granary.
Plate 15. A Barkola Sikh shopkeeper and his daughter.

Plate 16. An Assamese Sikh housewife at loom.
Plate 17. The old gurdwara at Barkola founded by Subedar Ram Singh.

Plate 18. An inside view of the old gurdwara.

Plate 20. The reading of Sukhmani Sahib is in progress in a Sikh household.
Plate 21. The front part of a Sikh house. The top of the wall is decorated with khandas.

Plate 22. The living house of a Barkola Sikh.
Plate 23. A Sikh joint family.

Plate 25. The granthi of the new gurdwara and his son who does not sport Sikh attire.

Plate 26. Head of a Sikh household with his nephew.
Plate 27. Two Sikh housewives of which one (left) is from Tiwa tribe.

Plate 28. Feeding grand children.
Plate 29. The ceremonial bath of a Sikh groom.

Plate 30. The gate at a Sikh wedding at Barkola.
Plate 31. A Sikh groom offering betel nuts to the guests and receiving presentations.

Plate 32. The recitation of the Granth Sahib at a Sikh wedding.
Plate 33. Sardar Biyan Singh, the granthi of the old gurdwara. (He expired on June 21, 1989.)

Plate 34. Guru Nanak Library of Barkula.
Plate 35. The Sikh village headman of Chaparmukh Singh Gaon.

Plate 36. The SGPC sevadar with his wife who is an Assamese Sikh.
Plate 37. The beating of the kettle drum (doba) at Chaparmukh gurdwara.

Plate 38. A Sikh grand mother of Barkola. Her marriage was the first in the village to be performed according to Sikh rites.