ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I wish to express my deep sense of gratitude to Dr. M. Taber, Professor and Head of the Department of Geography, Gauhati University, for his guidance, inspiration, suggestion and criticism at every stage of the present work.

I extend my thankful appreciation to the Librarians of Gauhati University, Nagaland State Library, Kohima, Library of the Science College, Kohima and of several other libraries in Nagaland and outside for extending their help in procuring necessary books and materials. I am also grateful to the officials of different Departments of the Government of Nagaland and autonomous bodies for their help and cooperation in collecting different data and facts related to my work.

I am especially grateful to the Government of Nagaland and the Principal, Science College, Kohima, for providing me necessary facilities for completing this study.

I am beholden to all those who have provided me help, especially many villagers and village-officials who patiently answered my queries and cooperated with me during my field work. I also wish to thank Mr. Kalicharan Das, who transformed the final draft of my thesis into a presentable typescript.

I owe a great deal to the members of my family who have sacrificed a lot while I remained engaged in this work. I must record my sincere appreciation, in particular of my wife's continuous encouragement and support in many ways in course of completing this thesis.
