Acknowledgement

The research and writing of this thesis has been a long process and as I come to the end of it, I feel greatly indebted to several people in my life who have directly or indirectly influenced my entire thought process during these years.

At the very outset, I thank all the women of my study area who, despite many household obligations and duties, voluntarily agreed to devote their time in the long interviews and shared with me some of the most personal and painful experiences of their lives. Without their support, this thesis would not have seen completion today.

I am ever thankful to my guide Professor Niru Hazarika of the Department of Political Science, Gauhati University for allowing me to work under her supervision. Her expert guidance, wisdom, unwavering encouragement and time given to me provided me with the courage and confidence that is so essential for any research project.

I am also grateful to Professor Sandhya Goswami, Head of the Department, Political Science, Gauhati University for solving many of the methodological problems associated with the field survey and for her constant words of inspiration.

Thank you my family. I thank my father, Anis Uz Zaman, for constantly reminding me that I needed to finish this thesis on time. His immense love, care and concern and his belief in his three daughters fill me with pride and reverence. Thanks for providing me with everything that I have ever wanted. I thank my mother, Dr. Shamim Akhtar, for being my pillar of emotional and moral support. I thank her, not only for the time spent with me during the entire research process and reading through the drafts, but also for the inspiration that I got by observing the strength of her personality, her practical experiences while dealing with women at the grassroots and from those serious discussions we had on women’s lives.

Thanks to my husband and soul-mate, Dr. Farhin Iqbal for his patience, for always supporting my dreams and for believing in me. I am grateful for his help in the analysis of the data, in the reading of the drafts of the chapters and his critical comments which helped me develop a clear line of thinking. I thank him for shouldering the entire burden of domestic responsibilities without which it would have been difficult for me to concentrate in this study.

I express my love and affection for my two younger sisters, Tanaka Tabassum and Lonava Tahreen for appreciating all my achievements with your smiles. I specially thank Tanaka for her expert editing skills who helped me in arranging the layout of the thesis.

I owe my gratefulness to the staff of Women’s Studies Research Centre, Gauhati University; Krishna Kanta Handique Library; Central Research Library, University of Delhi; Directorate of Census Operations, Assam for the help and cooperation at various stages of the research.

My special thanks to Dr. Archana Sharma, Director of WSRC, Gauhati University for her valuable suggestions and encouragement, Diganta Baruah and Hafiza Begum of W.S.R.C. Gauhati University for allowing me to issue books from their library which were of much help in the study.

I appreciate the help rendered to me by Prabhat Bania who acted as my guide to the villages and helped me in developing grassroots contact persons during my field survey.

I am grateful to the Indian Council of Social Science Research (ICSSR), New Delhi for awarding me with the Doctoral Fellowship to work in this area of research. The fellowship greatly helped in addressing my financial requirements during the field survey and in the printing and binding of the thesis.

Thanks to some of my friends, Jaby Mathew, Sakira and Dolly with whom I have had many discussions on various aspects of the research.
