CONTENTS

PREFACE

CHAPTERS

INTRODUCTION

CHAPTER I

The conceptual development of Personnel Management - its wide application in the modern business world. Experience and experimentation in the developed and developing countries. Personnel Management - its impact on labour relations and labour productivity. Indispensability of Personnel Management in the developing countries in the context of the urgency of rapid industrial growth and enhanced production. Personnel Management as a separate function of business management. Organization types of Personnel Departments - their scope and range of activities. Personnel Policies: Manpower Planning and Forecasting of Manpower requirements - Job Description, Job Evaluation, Policy on sources and recruitment of labour, selection/placement, orientation. Training and Development Programmes of workers, supervisors and management - working condition. Wages and salary Administration, Incentive Schemes, fringe benefits etc. and their effects on labour and productivity. Modern trend of thinking on incentives, motivation, creativity, sense of belonging, achievements of goal congruence between labour and management. Leadership - Union theory and practice, job security, employment communication. Industrial legislation and extent of implementation. Tradition vs technology. Managerial goal. All these are within the functional pattern of the Personnel Department.

CHAPTER II

A General Review of Assam Economy. Poverty in the midst of plenty is the conspicuous feature of Assam Economy. The causes of this state of affairs. Review of the role of State entrepreneurship and scope of vast industrialization to combat the unemployment menace and raising standard of living of its masses.

p. 1-22

p.23-51
CHAPTER III
Concept of Personnel Management: Origin and Evolution. Need of this managerial function. Experiences in the advanced countries. Position in India. Modern trend of labour incentives such as bonus, overtime, shift allowance. Adjustment in accordance with the national socio-economic goals. Urgency of comprehensive schemes of Personnel Management in Assam specially recruitment, training and motivation for work, wages and salary administration. Study of the organisation pattern of the Personnel Departments. Scope and mode of their functioning.
Effectiveness of this department. Records of labour relations, strikes and lock-outs, absenteeism, labour turnover, productivity and profitability of the concerns. Disciplinary problems. All these shall be objectively assessed from the study of the Personnel Management of the large industrial undertakings with special reference to Assam Oil Company Limited, Digboi. The size of the units and direct relation with efficiency of the Personnel Department. Scope and suggestion for improvements.

CHAPTER IV
Categories of Workers - temporary, probationer, casual, permanent.
Functions of Personnel Department - method of Manpower planning/forecasting of Manpower requirements in the context of expansion of business activities, retirements, deaths, quits, etc. Levels of policy, job analysis/job evaluation. Source of recruitment - recruitment policy-recruitment from within, recruitment from outsiders. Transfers, Promotions. Selection and placement - Manpower training and development programmes. Management Development plans.
Wages and Salary Administration, Minimum wages, basis of fixation of monthly/daily wages - annual increments; (wages and salary surveys), job evaluation, labour grades, adjustment to new rates. Salaries of skilled/unskilled/semi-skilled and clerical workers. Employee benefits and services - hours of work, shift system, paid holidays, break for tea, coffee, lunch, leave of absence - casual leave, sick leave, annual leave, leave without pay, old age and retirement benefits, Employee morale, employment communication and implementation of labour legislation. Labour Movements - Unions' theory, Unions' Leadership, collective bargaining - workers' participation in Management.

CHAPTER V
Case study of Public Sector Undertaking: Indian Oil Corporation, (Refinery Division) Guahati.
CHAPTER VI
Case study of Joint Sector Undertaking: Oil India Limited, Duliajan.

 CHAPTER VII
Case study of Private Sector Undertaking: Assam Oil Company Limited, Digboi.

 CHAPTER VIII
A comparison between Public and Private Sector Undertakings in regard to Personnel Management and comments on the findings from the comparison.

CHAPTER IX
Conclusion and suggestions: the present labour laws of our country with special reference to their impact on labour productivity and labour relations. Study on the loop-holes in these laws and/or in their implementation. The recent thinking in this regard in India. The trade Union Movement and the present attempt to enact comprehensive labour legislation to effect better co-ordination amongst the main trade organisation. Legislative approach, re-orientation of trade union organisation, effective two-way communication and control in the undertakings, Managerial discipline and motivation of the labour force, adoption of business like approach by the Management particularly State Undertakings and clear-cut division of the financial and non-financial goals, linking of financial benefits with productivity, scope for widening the range of fringe benefits like canteens, educational facilities for employees and their children, management and employee self-development plans, medical and transport facilities, recreational and cultural facilities, old age benefits, merit rating and promotion, individual aptitude in matters of placement, closer personal touch amongst rank and file employees, precise and workable planning, widening the scope for effective participation of workers in management, fixation of cost and responsibility centres, clear correlation between delegation of power and accountability.
BIBLIOGRAPHY
ABBREVIATION
APPENDIX

p. i - x
p. xi
p. xii-xvi