CONTENTS

CHAPTER I Introduction
p. 1-p. 10

Geographical location 1; early history 1-3 (old remains, 1; Koch conquest and Chilarai, 2; Dheylans, 2; transfer of Cachar as dowry, 3); Dimasa Kacharis, 3; different background of Karimganj Subdivision, 3-4 (Bhaskarvarman and Midhanpur copper-plate, 4; Mrichandra and Paschimbhag plate, 4; Shah Jalal, 4; East India Company, 4); Population break up, 4; different linguistic groups, 5; migration of the Bengalees, 5-7 (king's patronage, 5-6; encouragement by the British, 7; partition of India and influx, 7; affinities between Sylhet and Cachar, 7; scope for investigation 7-10 (influence of Austric and Tibeto-Burman speaking people, 8; Buddhism and Islam, 8; influence of the Dimasas, 9; socio-economic undercurrent and retention of older form, 10).

CHAPTER II
Kapilasram: a cult-spot and its background (I)
p. 11- p.30

Location of cult-spot, 11; Shivalinga and other statues, 11-12; background of the name Siddheswar and Kapilasram, 12; legend of Pura Raja, 12-63; ritual bathing and varuni fair, 14; some curious features, 14-15; relics of cultural clash, 15; primitive origin of river-deities, 16; Khasi river goddess Kupli, 17; her importance, 17-18; human sacrifice associated with the deity, 18; probable association between Kupli and Kapilasram, 19-21 (significance of Pura Raja legend, 19-20; sacrificial stone slab, 20; Kupli to Kapila, 21); association of the Khasi's with the cult-zone, 22-24 (in pre-historic days, 22; at the time of Muslim invasion, 22-23; during the Muslim rule, 24;); remnant of Khasi influence, 25-27 (Khasi origin of Sour Govinua, 26; Garua Brahmins, Pators and Baruis, 26); clash of cults, 27-30 (indigenous lower castes and immigrant upper castes, 28; attitude of the upper caste towards the river deity, 28-29; installation of Shiva, 29; Shiva represented upper castes high-browism, 29-30;

CHAPTER III

Kapilasram: a cult-spot and its background (II)
p. 31- p. 40

Kapilasram of Gangasagar, 31; Ramayana story, 31-32; importance of Gangasagar, 32; some common features, 32-33; Austric practice of river worship, 34-35; retention of old practice by the Khasis, 35; probable common original of two cult-spots, 36-37; Kapila, the founder of Sankhya philosophy, 37; non-aryan origin of the Sankhya, 38; origin of Sankhya- its probable association with Khasi matriarchal society, 39-40.

CHAPTER IV

Bhuban Tirtha: a cult-spot on the hill top
p. 41- p. 51

Location of Bhuban hill, 41; stone images of the deities, 41; rites observed by pilgrims, 42; the mysterious tunnel and caves 42-44; cultural background and description of the images, 44; different cultural phases, 45; probable association of primitive pastoratist, 45-46; Kiratas and early Shaivites of Eastern India, 46; second phase and the Tripuris 47-48; third phase and Buddhism, 48-49; socio-political support behind the cult-spot, 50; restoration of the tirtha, 51.
CHAPTER V
Badsah : cult of a local godling
p. 53-p.68

cult-zone of Badsah, 53; domain and sphere of activities of the godling, 53-54; oblations and procedure of worship, 54; Muslim origin, 54; still venerated by lower class Muslims, 55; some kindred deities - Satyapir, 56; Sara Gazi Khan, 56-57; Manik Pir, 57; Sona Roy, 57-58; deification of Muslim saints, 58; identification of Badsah with Shahid Hamja, 60; reasons behind the suggestion, 60-63 (Shah Jalal and his disciples, 60; Hamja's association with tiger, 61; Sahija Badsah, 61-62; mokan of Chhagal Mara, 62; tiger and Muslim saints, 63; Baghai cult and Badsah, 64; Badsah's infiltration in Kali temples, 65; social background behind the practice, 65-63 (lower caste early population, 66; Buddhism and Sylhet, 66; votive stupas, 66; religious vacuum and transformation of stupas, 67-68).

CHAPTER VI
Ranachandi and Nimata : transformation of Dimasa Kachari deities.
p.69- p.84

Temples of Ranachandi at Khaspur and Bijoypur, 69-70; the sword myth, 70-71; Gosani myth of Cochbehar, 72-73; similar myth from Indo-China, 73-74; common motifs, 74; the Macchis, the Koches and the Indochinese, 75; serpent and dragon, 75; common origin of three myths, 76; absorption of the tribal deity, 76; dragon, makara and godhika, 77-78; Kimata—meaning of the word, 78; her shrine at Barkhala, 79; Harishchandra and the lost elephant, 79-80; a similar legend of North Bengal, 80; probable Bodo origin of the legend, 80; the deity represented by stone-slabs, 81;
the deity represented by stone-slabs, 81; esteem and dread for Nimata—story of a contractor, 82; sylvan origin of Nimata, 83; Nimata and Jagaddhatri—gradual absorption of the former in the cult of Jagaddhatri, 83–85.

CHAPTER VII
Agricultural rites
p.86–p.111

Garbhā sankrānti: date, 86; sadhbhakshan of paddy, 86; manner of the ritual, 87; equivalent rites of other places, 87–88; equation of rice-bearing field and child-bearing mother, 88–89; invocation of Lakshmi and painting of footprints, 90–91; Lakshmi’s sojourn in paddyfield and parallel notions of other places, 91–92; Lakshmi and corn-spirit, 93; original intention behind the practice of painting footprints, 94–95; Bhola sankrānti: date, 95; procedure, 95–96; association with harvest, 96–97; magical drawing of a protective line, 97–98; European custom of expulsion of evils, 97–98; rites for ousting flies and mosquitoes in different places, 98–100; significance of the name Bhola sankrānti, 100–101; The grain exhortation rite: nature of the rite, 101–102; the incantation, 102; similar customs of other places, 103–104; probable common origin, 104–105; Rituals of the last sheaves: reaping of the last sheaves, 105–106; partaking of last corn, 106; harvest customs of other places, 106–107; Sūri or the oldwoman, 108–109; significance of the partaking of last corn, 109–110; consumption of the corn-spirit, 110–111.

CHAPTER VIII
Female rites and ceremonies (I)
p.112–p.123

Sūrya-vrata: procedure and manner, 112–113; magical significance, 113-114; Kalathakur, 114; rain-charm, 115; intermingling of sun-worship and rain-charm, 116-117; Kalathakur and Jukrishna, 117; Rupasi-vrata: meaning of word Rupasi, 118; abode of the deity, 118; manner of observance, 118-119; sylvan origin, 119-120; similar rite of the dwellers of Chotonagpur, 120; trees believed to be inhabited by ancestors, 121; traits of the fertility cult, 121-122; attempt to upgrade Rupasi, 122-123.
(v)

Chapter IX

Female rites and ceremonies
p.124-p.132

Agnipurnimar vrata: manner of the vrata, 124; objective of the first portion, 124-125; second portion is "injict injury on a foe, 125; similar practices of different places, 125-126; striking similarity with an Italian practice, 126-127; Achambiter vrata: procedure of the rite, 127-128; a magical rite to beget off-spring, 128; Hasik vrata: undertaken for a span of five months, 128; simple procedure, 129; an austerity rite, 129-130; Sikol vatar vrata: preparation of Sikol, a special kind of dry fish, 130-131; functional part of the vrata, 131; probable significance, 132.

Chapter X

The Mouka Puja - a unique Manasa worship of Cachar-Sylhet
p.133-p.147

Date of the puja, 133; name a misnomer, 133; general description of the puja, 133-134; Manasa is the principal deity, 134; recital of Padmapuran by gurmis and ohas, 134-135; huge expenditure, 135; use of boat is a novelty, 135-136; spread of Manasa worship among fishermen, 136;
the puja originated perhaps amongst the fisherman, 136-137; date coincides with the date of Saraswati worship, 137; resemblance between two deities not real reason, 137-138; worship of professional tools on the Sripanchami day, 139; date is related with harvesting pattern, 140; the puja is an attempt to establish Manasa's superiority, 141-142; Vyadibhaktitarangini, Sanskrit treatise on Manasa worship, 142; mode of worship described in the treatise, 143-144; it is nothing but a description of Koukapuja, 144; identity of Vidyapati, the supposed author of the treatise, 144-145; it was composed by a spurious Vidyapati, 146; an attempt to give scriptural sanction, 147.

CHAPTER XI
Usha Dhasani: a folkrite associated with the Kartik-worship p.147-p.163

Description of the ceremony, 147-149; the saucer garden or the garden of Adonis, 149; the myth of Usha, 150-151; attitude of local women towards Kartik, 151-152; misogyny of Kartik - an old and widespread attribute, 152-153; Yaudheyas and origin of Kartik worship, 153-154; attitude of warlike people towards women, 154-155; Kartik derives misogyny from his early promoters, 155; spread of Kartik worship and its socio-political background, 155-156; malevolent traits of Kartik, 157; agricultural people's natural dislike for the god of a warlike people, 158; misogyny - a trait hated by the agriculturists, 158-159; remnant of this early dislike, 159-160; Usha as a corn-maiden, 160-161; attempt to upgrade the corn-maiden, 162; the myth speaks of a tacit resistance, 162-163.
CHAPTER XII
Ritual dances and songs
p.164-p.178

The Gurmi dance: Gurmis or eunuch dancer, 164; Darai puja and gurmi dancer, 164; description of Darai puja, 165; meaning of the term Darai, 165-166; fertilising attribute of Darai, 165; eunuch priests and their association with some ancient and celebrated mother-goddesses, 167-168; Darai might be a local parallel, 168; gurmi dance and Manasa worship, 169; tendency to equate Darai and Manasa, 170; evolution from priestesses to male priests dressed as female, 171-172; Dhamail dance: occasions of performance, 172; description of the dance, 173; remnants of the tribal past, 173; Vaisnavite influence, 174; origin and meaning of the word 'dhamail', 174-175; Bou-nach: a nearly extinct dance, 175-176; description of the dance, 176-177; sophisticated features, 177; Manasa legend and Bou-nach, 178;

CHAPTER XIII
Folk elements in Brahmanical rites
p.173-p.187

Peki-Khela: observed on Vijaya day, 179; crude features, 180; coconut as a trophy, 180; coconut and human skull, 180-181; significance of the ceremony, 181-182; Remnant of bamboo worship: ceremonial use of bamboo tops, 182-183; association of bamboo with Tibeto-Burman culture, 182-183; early Bodo dwellers of the region, 183-184; Folk elements in shraddha ceremony: recital to expel evil spirit, 184; drawal of protective magical line, 185;
Aalbhairab worship, 185-186; association of primitive dog-worship, 186; other minor rites, 186-187.

CHAPTER XIV

Conclusion

p.183-p.198

Hinduism and process of absorption, 188; local variations, 188-189; encounter with indigenous faith, 189-190; four broad divisions of absorption, 190-192; prudence of the champions of Hinduism, 192-193; some special features of acculturation of Surma Valley, 193-194; missing links, 194-195; secular rites, 196-197; uniformity of folk-beliefs, 197-198.

Appendix A

Glossary of local words p.199-p.207

Appendix B

Bengali months and their corresponding English dates p.208

Appendix C

Temples, shrines and other places of worship p.209-p.214

Appendix D

Folk customs and Folklore of Sylhet p.215-p.231 (extracts from a paper published in Man in India (Vol. X) by P. Bhattacharjee)

Appendix E

Bibliography p.232-p.237