I must acknowledge with profound gratitude that my interest in Shakespeare's History Plays and in the question of a new vision of political and social awareness that they embodied, was first instilled by Professor Hiren Gohain, of the English Department, Gauhati University. It was under his careful supervision that I proceeded upon this research work that led to a fresh examination of Shakespeare's patriotism. I am aware that certain areas of this work require a fuller treatment, but my thesis has already become unmanageably bulky and I hope to pursue such details some day.

I must admit that the limitations of library facilities may have kept related work beyond access for me. But I am sure such work would not drastically alter my findings. However I must express my sincere thanks to the staff of K.K. Handiqui Library of Gauhati University, where the major part of my work was carried out. I must also thank the administration and staff of the National Library, Calcutta, and The British Council Library, Calcutta. I remain grateful to Mr. M. Saikia of the Cambridge University Press, New Delhi, and to Select Book Service, New Delhi, for their kind service. I thank Sri B. Roychoudhury for having painstakingly typed my thesis.
I express my thanks to the administration of Tezpur College, Tezpur, for making available for me the U.G.C. teacher's fellowship for one year in 1993-94. I remain grateful to my family and to those friends who always took an interest in the progress of my work and assisted me in so many ways that I can never thank them enough. And above all I remain grateful to my guide whose kindness and patience I have tried, without his encouragement, especially at those times when despair overcomes one's confidence, this work would never have seen the light of day.
