I am greatly obliged to my guide Prof. B.C. Kar of the Department of Education, Gauhati University, for his constructive guidance and supervision, as it is only due to his constant helping that this thesis has reached its present state. I am also grateful to Dr K.P. Bora, Head of the Department of Education, Gauhati University, and Dr A.C. Bhagavati of the Department of Anthropology for their valuable suggestions and encouragement during the course of my work. I am indeed very grateful to Abdul Mannan of the Department of Statistics, Gauhati University for doing most of the statistical calculations for me.

I cannot possibly mention here all the names of the people who helped me a lot in the administration of the tests both in the Khasi hills and Nagaland and to them for their assistance I remain grateful as a rewarded worker. But I must especially thank the headmen of the villages where I worked for their kind co-operation.

My sincere thanks is to the Librarians and staff of Gauhati University, Delhi University and the Naga Cultural Research and State Museum Nagaland Library and North Eastern Hill University Library whose ungrudging help and co-operation proved invaluable in finding out material of my study.

Lastly I shall ever remain obliged to the University authorities for granting me U.G.C. Research Scholarship for four years time to pursue my work.
