ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This dissertation would have been impossible without the supervision and direction of Dr. A. DATA, formerly Professor and Head of the Department of English, Gauhati University and subsequently of Dibrugarh University and, currently, Chief Editor: "The Encyclopaedia of Indian Literatures", Sahitya Akademi, NEW DELHI. It was he who suggested the subject of this project after listening to one of my interest in 16th century English literature. In the course of the long years I have been busy with the dissertation, he never allowed me to compromise with the standard he sets up for the scholars who work under him; consequently, if this study has any merit worth the name, it is due to him. His patience to bear with my ditherings and delays over the prolonged period has been exemplary.

I remember with gratitude, Mr. R.S. Verma, Assistant Librarian, National Library, Calcutta whose help as a friend and, librarian is hard to describe.
I acknowledge my appreciation of Mr. Harish Gupta, the young Deputy Librarian, also of the National Library whose zest to help and ready acquiescence to arrange for the importation of reference books from U.K. and U.S.A. obviated insurmountable difficulties. Mention is due to Dr. Suryamani Misra, a friend and former colleague, at present, Deputy Director, National Atlas Organisation Calcutta, for the unremitting moral support. I would like to mention (Prof.) R.K. Agrawal of the Jawaharlal Nehru University Centre Imphal (now in ?P. Women's College, Imphal), a very close friend and colleague for some of the important books he lent, and the occasional discussions I had had with him on the subject that resulted in clarifying some confusions.

The librarian(s) of D.M. College, Imphal have always been ready to offer whatever assistance they could.

My thanks are also due to (Prof.) A. Raghunani Singh, Head of the Department of English, D.M. College of Arts & Commerce, Imphal, for sympathising with my efforts, and sparing me from some departmental burdens whenever it was possible for him.

Left, but not the least, I acknowledge my thanks to the Education Secretary, Govt. of Manipur, for the leave of absence, without which the study necessary for this work would not have been possible.

Prof. Douglas L. Peterson's The English Lyric from Wyatt to Donne is the basis of this project. I have laid him and Vere L. Rubel (Poetic Diction in the English Renaissance) heavily under contribution.
