Acknowledgement

It is said that life is a journey and one does not travel alone. The process of conducting the present research has proved it one more time to me. At the outset I must express my profoundest gratitude to my supervisor, Pro. (Dr.) Gnagotri Chakraborty who taught me consciously and unconsciously how interesting the study of law is. Honestly, to me she is more a mentor than a supervisor for the present research. I am proud to mention that she is the one who taught me how to teach during my grooming days as a teacher at GNLU in 2004. Right from identifying an appropriate subject to the entire writing process of this thesis, she lent her precious time, vast experience and great wisdom that led me to finish this research. I have not heard of another professor who goes so far out of his/her way to make sure students are prepared for whatever the next step in their journey be.

I am also indebted to the Director, GNLU Professor (Dr.) Bimal N. Patel for always motivating and providing all possible assistance for pursuing timely submission.

I can never thank enough my Parents Bhupendra and Vinee for making me what I am today. I have learnt the first lessons of punctuality and regularity from my father who is an author himself. His unconditional appreciation has been the force of life. The clarity of thought given by him has made me understand and apply things in proper perspective. My mother through her life demonstrated the importance of being positive and patient about everything in life. These values have played a pivotal role during the entire process of the current research.

I would like to express my earnest gratitude to my parents-in-law Chaitanya and Utpala for their unfailing emotional support. I am blessed to have such in-laws who have been a great source of affection and encouragement. I have learnt from my mother-in-law how to give priority to the present situation without regretting about the past and being anxious about the next thing to happen in future. This has helped me immensely during the time when I was unable to strike a balance between my personal responsibilities and research work.

My nine years old son Pratyush, who hardly understood what writing a thesis was and what I was researching on, has shown incredible maturity to appreciate my absence and long working hours even at home.

Most importantly, none of this would have been possible without the love and patience of my husband - Hriday. I am at a loss of words to express my feeling of gratitude towards him. His unconditional support and unparalleled encouragement has made this dream come true for me. His continuous reminders to work on my thesis which though I found to be irritating at times actually led me to set up regular schedules for timely completion of it.

My immediate family members, Megha-Tridip, Preeti-Tushar and Kabul-Foram have as always been by my side in all initiatives.

Life seems to be beautiful when one is surrounded by friends. Avinash, being with me since I joined GNLU in 2004, has always been very encouraging with his optimistic approach. I am grateful to Divya especially for his thought provoking comments and meaningful suggestions on the present research. Geographical distance has never been a limitation for friends like Aashal and Soma. I am extremely thankful to Prof. (Dr.) Shobhlata Udapudi, GNLU for being a constant source of love, care and concern. My appreciation has no bounds towards friends like Viral, William, Vikas, Saurabh, and all faculty colleagues at GNLU.
I extend sincere thanks to Lagdhirbhai, Librarian, GNLU, Avaniben, Assistant Librarian, GNLU and Kamleshbhai, Library Assistant for being very helpful with all available sources that I wanted to refer. Lastly I take this opportunity to thank all those who have directly or indirectly helped me in pursuing my dream of doctoral studies.
