ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

I express my deep gratitude to Dr. R.P. Chaudhuri, M.Sc. (Cal), Ph.D (London), Professor and Head of Department of Life-Sciences, Dibrugarh University. During his tenure as Professor and Head of the Department of Zoology, Gauhati University, he kindly suggested the problems of this thesis, and the whole investigation was carried out under his able supervision.

The University of Gauhati provided me with all facilities for carrying out the work in the laboratory of the Department of Zoology. I must express my grateful thanks to Prof. (Dr) R.P. Chaudhuri and to Dr (Mrs) M. Das, former and present Heads of the Department respectively. My respectful thanks are due to Dr. S.C. Dey and to Dr. T.C. Deka, Readers in the Department, who have always been kind to me. Dr. H.C. Mahanta, Reader in the Department, and other members of the staff including research workers have always encouraged me with their valuable help and suggestions. My sincere thanks go to them all.

I am grateful to Dr. P.P. Wamenon, Reader in the Department of Agricultural Botany, and Dr. S. Nandy, Reader in the Department of Statistics, Gauhati University for their valuable suggestions in doing statistical analysis of my experimental data.
I am grateful to Shri A. Rahman, Entomologist in the Rice Research Station, Titabor for supplying the rice varieties used in this investigation. Thanks are also due to the Director of Central Rice Research Institute, Cuttack and to Shri B.C. Gogoi, Joint Director in the Department of Agriculture, Government of Assam for giving me valuable information on the rice varieties.

I deeply appreciate the promptness with which the Commonwealth Institute of Entomology, London kindly identified some specimens of insects reported here. Mention must also be made of the sincere co-operation extended to me by the employees working in the godowns of the Food Corporation of India, from where a large number of grain samples were collected for this research work.

This research was done with a 'Teacher-Fellowship' granted to me by the University Grants Commission, for which I am grateful to the U.G.C and authorities of the B. Borooah College, Gauhati.
