ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

The thesis prepared for submission to the University of Burdwan for the Ph.D. Degree, is worked out under the supervision of Dr. Radharaman Chakraborti, Professor, Department of Political Science, University of Burdwan, on deputation to Director, Netaji Institute for Asian Studies, Calcutta. I consider myself especially fortunate in having him as my research supervisor. I am deeply indebted to him for his valuable advice, help and guidance and the freedom which he gave me for pursuing my own ideas of approach to the problems I took up for investigation.

The present study would never have been possible without the friendship and cooperation of the people of the four villages where I conducted fieldwork. I am indeed, grateful to my hosts and informants in the villages and during my stay in the villages, they not only gave me hospitality but spent hours on collecting data, narrating events and then answering the innumerable questions I put to them.

Finally, the Librarian and staff of the National Library, Calcutta, have been extremely cooperative throughout and I am taking this opportunity of thanking them.
