Any kind of research work in the generic fields of Social and Political Sciences requires the intellectual expertise and adequate comprehension of tools and techniques of analysis, (whatever may the problem area be). It would not have been feasible for me to develop and explore the present investigation in a scientific manner conforming to the requirements of research studies in Political Science without the able guidance and supervision of Dr. Radharaman Chakraborty, the distinguished political scientist, at present the Director of Netaji Institute of Asian Studies, Calcutta. At the outset, it is a privilege on my part to express my feelings of great indebtedness to Dr. Chakraborty for extending all help and encouragement during the entire project.

I deem it a pride to put it on record that I was deeply imbued and enriched with the thoughts of the renowned authors like Prof. William W. Murdoch, Mr. John W. Mellor, Mr. Gunnar Myrdal, Prof. Peter F. Drucker for their valuable contribution as the eminent exponents of the fields of economics and management sciences. While working on this research project I was inspired by the stream of thoughts contained in the seminal works of the celebrated sociologists such as Max Weber, Mr. Talcott Parsons, Mr. Joseph La Palombara and also to the Stalwarts in the sphere of co-operative movement as well as public administration such as Dr. D. R. Gadgil, Prof. D. G. Karve, Prof. V. M. Dandekar, Mr. V. A. Paipanandikar, Prof. S. R. Maheswari, Mr. H. K. Paranjape and Mr. P. R. Dubhashi.

In fine, I must express my respect and gratitude to Dr. Anil Baran Roy, Professor and Head of the Department of Political Science and other faculty members of the University of Burdwan for their useful participation and suggestion during the seminar talk on the theme of the dissertation. My heartfelt thanks and gratitude are due to Sri Ashis Kumar Roy and Ramendra Nath Dey for performing the stupendous task of typing out the manuscript over a short span of time.
