ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The author wishes to acknowledge all those who have helped directly or indirectly in the completion of the research and preparation of this report.

First of all I would like to thank my supervisor Prof. D.C. Goswami for introducing me, academically, to the world of drinking water, for teaching me what research is in true sense of the word, for giving me ample freedom to follow my ideas and for being there every step of the way. I would also like to thank Dr. S. Kalita, Head of the Department, Dr. H. P. Sarma, Reader in the Department, office workers and project scientists of Department of Environmental Science.

I sincerely acknowledge the sustained help, suggestion and encouragement received in completing the work from my erstwhile teacher Dr. M. Barthakur, Retd. Professor, Dept. of Geography, Gauhati University.

I thank Mr. Sanjiv Kalita, project scientists, Dept. of Environmental Science for his help and cooperation. In particular, I would like to thank Mr. Dipak Das of Population Research Centre, Gauhati University, for helping me in formulating few specific programming for database management based on the software in Visual Fox pro. I would like to thank all the Govt. and Non-Govt. Departments, who have provided me with useful background data for my research. In particular, I express my gratitude and offer thanks to CGWB, Guwahati, especially their scientist Dr. S. Devi, GMC, UMSSSB, PHED, NF Railway, Refinery, IIT Library, Guwahati and OKID Institute Library.

My friends who helped me out during my field work and my colleagues and students of B. Barooah College deserve my special thanks. The Principal of the college, Dr. (Ms.) R. Deka, deserves a special word of appreciation and thanks for her encouragement in my research venture.

I want to thank the University Grants Commission, NER, for awarding me a teacher fellowship for carrying out the present doctoral research.

I am greatly thankful to all my family members, especially my parents and relatives who have helped and encouraged me during the period of my research.

Last, but not the least I express my appreciation and thankfulness to my wife Anita for her sustained encouragement, moral support and help at various stages in my research work, including typing of a major part of the thesis on our home computer.
