Several individuals and institutions helped me in completing the work. I acknowledge them all with gratitude.

I am specially grateful to Dr. M.K. Sukumaran Nair, my research supervisor, for guiding the research. He encouraged me at every stage, gave me confidence and helped me intellectually in writing this thesis.

Dr. Vijayadharan Pillai, Project Officer, India Population Project was a source of unending help. I am deeply indebted to him for his support which, among several things, made the field work a pleasantly memorable experience.

I also thank Dr. Mohanan Pillai, Centre for Development Studies for reading the draft and giving his comments.

I am also thankful to Mrs. Padma Ramachandran, former Director, Institute of Management in Government for the interest she took in my research. She was also generous in providing me the institutional support I required to complete this work.

Deepa, my wife, read the manuscript and improved upon it both in terms of style and content. I owe her a special thanks.

Those who inspired and assisted me in this work were many. Dr. Sankaran Nair, T.A. Menon, R. Prakasm, Anand Kumar, Ranjana Kumari are some I would like to mention in this context.

The Medical Officers, the Public health nurses, other health personnel and the officers of Tribal Development department in Wynad were particularly helpful. They made the field work easier and I thank them all for their help.

Finally, I thank the tribals of Wynad, especially those who spent hours with me talking about their lives and their sorrows and happiness. It was an unforgettable experience.
