

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is an urge to make a contribution to the body of knowledge which motivates one to undertake any research project. But, motivation by itself, without proper guidance could hardly help one to proceed with the work. For having been able to accomplish the task of preparation of this broad-based assignment with its considerable dimensions, I feel profoundly indebted to Dr. H.C. Shukul whose persistent guidance, feedback and advice have moulded my efforts into the present shape. Putting together disparate ideas, and diverse wealth of material collected, into one cohesive format is a challenging task where guide is an asset. I am grateful to Dr. Shukul for his constant supervision and encouragement at every stage, that helped me to continue with confidence and complete this challenging academic enterprise. But for his able guidance and continuous moral support this dissertation would not have been completed, for, at times, the task seemed to be a formidable one. For this, I would continue to remain indebted to Dr. Shukul.

I express my gratitude to Prof. A.P. Rana for inducting me into this enterprise with his goodwishes. His kind efforts in providing me a fellowship under the Ford Foundation Programme in International Relations Studies in the department of Political Science enabled me to pursue my research work. I also wish to acknowledge the help that I received from Dr. Kanti Bajpai. His advice and suggestions have been valuable in shaping my initial conception of this study.

I am grateful to Dr. Nandedkar and Dr. Dilip Mohite, Head of the Department of Political Science, for the continued institutional support and encouragement. I have been very fortunate to be with a faculty who have generously shared their expertise. It has been my proud privilege to have had an opportunity to work in the midst of the highly congenial and stimulating intellectual environment provided by the Department. I wish to record my personal gratitude to Dr. Mohite and all his colleagues for the same. I also thank Mr. Arothe, Secretary to the Ford Foundation Programme, and his assistants Mr. Chalke and Mr. Karandikar, for their administrative support and good wishes.

The kind help and co-operation extended by Mr. Ghosh, Information Officer of the United Nations Information Centre, New Delhi, needs special acknowledgement. This enabled me to have access to the relevant UN documents which were rather invaluable for this research. In addition, I also thank Mr. Chakravarthy, Chief Librarian, Ministry of External Affairs Library, New Delhi, and Mr. Chitnis, Librarian, Indian Council for Research in International Economic Relations, New Delhi, who had extended their help in collecting some extensive supportive material. Thanks are also due to the concerned authorities at Nehru Memorial Library, New Delhi and India International Centre Library, New Delhi for their assistance in permitting me to refer to various journals.

Undertaking research in the field of International Organisation Studies today, more than anything else, calls for a holistic and inter-disciplinary approach. I remember, with deep gratitude the kind efforts of Prof. M.S. Rajan and Prof. K.P. Saksena of Jawaharlal Nehru University - under whom I had the good fortune to work, during my M.Phil-that had imbibed in me the value of the above approach to the study of International Organisations, especially the United Nations Organisations.

I would also like to thank Mr. Prashant Vasant and Miss. Varsha Mistry of Media Point, Baroda, who had laboured hard to complete the task of typing this dissertation.

Last, but not the least, I wish to express, with deep personal feelings, my profound gratitude to my family for the constant encouragement and painstaking and persistent support and help rendered during the course of my work. My debt, to my husband, my parents and my daughters, is immeasurable and the gratitude too deep for me to express in words.
