This has been an unusually long journey and I have incurred so many debts along the way that it is impossible for me to account for all of them. Among the people who have made a major difference and affected the outcome of this project, I would like to thank:

My supervisor, Dr. Deepak Kannal, whose generosity, patience and encouragement were the most important factors in the completion of this undertaking. His insightful classes on Indian sculpture, discussions and the exciting field trips are as unforgettable as the remarkable hospitality and friendship extended to batch after batch of students by him and Uma Didi.

My teachers and friends at the Art History Department of the Fine Arts Faculty, M.S. University of Baroda, particularly Dr. Parul Dave-Mukherji, for coaxing me back into the seminar circuit, Dr. Kushwaha and Dr. Shete for their supportive presence.

Jayaram Poduval for technical advice, camaraderie and the many heated arguments about pre-modern architecture. Jayati Mukherji – for decades of unconditional friendship. Jayati, Vijay Bagodi and Uma have always given me a warm and welcoming home in Baroda. Zaida and Aruvi for solidarity and much common ground.

Ravi Kadam of the Art History Department for unfailing cheerful helpfulness. The office staff at the Faculty of Fine Arts, particularly Shri Prakash Kar, for his efficient negotiating of the intricacies of paperwork.

Dr. Deepanjana Danda Klein for getting me back on track and for that wonderful July evening in Manhattan. Dr. Frederick Asher for reaching out with generosity.

My friends in Hyderabad: Dr. Giridhar Rao – for his inexhaustible interest in and nuanced grasp of the most outlandish spheres of scholarship (including my research area); for his irreplaceable encouragement, hospitality, eagle-eyed editing skills and incisive comments. Rekha, Rahel, Mythili, Shiv and Ishaan – for being my extended family in my adopted city. Alex Mathew – for introducing me to the world of contemporary art, for rock-solid friendship, for believing in me against the odds. Supriya, Gargi, Rajiv Velicheti and Dr. Ananthakrishnan, for camaraderie, intellectual companionship and moral support. Dr. Kulkarni, for his encouragement, constructive criticism and a scintillating semester of Kantian philosophy.

Ten batches of students at the Department of Fine Arts, Sarojini Naidu School of Arts and Communication, University of Hyderabad – they made this inquiry imperative but also made it worthwhile. Varunika and Bindu – for innumerable stimulating, hilarious discussions.

Dr. Probal Dasgupta, Dr. Rajeshwari Sunder Rajan, Prof. S Subramanian for their invaluable advice and encouragement.

My remarkable family in Chennai and elsewhere. My parents-in-law, for their unfailing support and enthusiastic help with childcare. Mahesh, for materializing like a good genie at the crucial moment to do a professional job of the formatting. Paddu for an endless supply of addas, laughter and filter coffee. Vidya and Nigel, for setting impossibly high standards of scholarship in the first place, and following this up with all kinds of support – hospitality, academic discussion, babysitting, editing, criticism, cups of tea and the occasional snake-rescue to break the monotony of writing. Richard, for allowing me to share his space and time with his parents.

Pati, who at ninety-five, has given me a taste for (and rare insights into) a very grounded and delightfully textured form of history – a century of which she narrates and embodies. Her greatest teaching, however, has always been how to appreciate life - here and now. This work is dedicated to her and to the memory of Nats – exemplary diagnostician, autodidact-polymath, original thinker – unconventional and wonderful father. Amma, who has stood by me throughout my life, and had the audacity to claim her second doctor's degree in her 60’s.

Raj – for years of companionship and growing together – for being my toughest critic and my most unwavering support. Pradyumna - the pivot of my existence for the last twelve years, who has never had a thesis-free mother so far. They have put up with so much, given up so much to see this work completed. I owe them much more than can be expressed in words.
