ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A research study the type of which is presented in this volume obviously can reach fruition only if the writer has the benefit of discussions and deliberations with those who are occupying higher intellectual plain in the domain of academics. The writer, therefore, had the benefit of discussions with several of such academicians. Not only that but at the end also a lot of assistance is called for which can be availed of only from bosom friends. It is, therefore, in the fitness of things that I may take this opportunity to express my feelings of gratitude and appreciation for the help, encouragement and enlightenment I have received from various sources.

At the outset I express my deep sense of gratitude to my guide and my teacher Dr. J.H. Adhvaryu, Professor and Head, Department of Economics, Sardar Patel University, Vallabh Vidyanagar, for guiding me as well as continuously taking a very keen and active interest in my work. He has not only guided me in my research work but he has also taught me the art of writing. Apart from this, he has always come to my rescue in my moments of crisis. Without his constant encouragement and fatherly affection it would have been impossible for me to complete my work. I find myself unable to express in words my indebtedness to him.
I would also like to record my gratefulness to Dr. V.S. Vyas, presently, the Director of the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad. As my teacher at the Sardar Patel University he always encouraged me in my efforts. Even when he left the University he always extended his help to me whenever I approached him. As a matter of fact, he introduced me to his friend Dr. Rattan Bhatia of the International Monetary Fund, who suggested me the present topic for my dissertation. Dr. Vyas has played a considerable role in the completion of my work.

I am specially thankful to Dr. K.K. Subrahmanian, Director, Sardar Patel Institute of Economic and Social Research, Ahmedabad, and Dr. R. Radhakrishna also of the same Institute, for sparing their valuable time to discuss with me certain aspects of my work. They also provided the required stimulus for completing the present work.

I am also thankful to Dr. H.P. Chokshi, Professor and Head, Department of Business Economics and Dean, Faculty of Commerce, M.S. University of Baroda, Baroda, for having encouraged me and providing me with the necessary facilities for the completion of the work.

My thanks are due to Shri H.F. Patel of the Department of Economics, Sardar Patel University, for handling certain regression equations.
Several friends have gone through the typed script. Shri Ashwin Adhvaryu spared his valuable time to go through a few chapters. Shri Mahendra Shaktawat constantly and tirelessly for several days sat with me for making the necessary corrections in the type script. Without his help it would have been rather difficult for me to submit the thesis in time. I am thankful to all such friends for their kind help.

I would be doing injustice to Shri J.S. Kelkar, who typed this dissertation. If I don’t express my heartfelt thanks to him. As a matter of fact he sat for hours together at a stretch to see that the volume is ready just in time. Kudos to Mr. Kelkar!
