

Davis, P.R., and Arnott, A.W., Effects of lifting on heart rate, Ergonomics, Vol.9, 1966, pp.341.

Dryden, R.D., A prediction model for the maximum permissible weight of lift from knuckle to shoulder height, Doctoral dissertation, Texas Tech University, Lubbock, TX, 1973.

Emanuel, I., Chafee, J.W., and Wing, J., A study of human weight lifting capabilities for loading ammunition in the F-86 H aircraft, WADC-TR56 (Ohio: Wright Patterson Airforce Base), 1956.

Gamberale, F., Perceived exertion, heart rate, oxygen uptake and blood lactate in different work operations, Ergonomics, Vol. 15, 1972, pp. 545-554.

Grandjean, E., Fitting the task to the man, Taylors and Francis Ltd., London, 1980.

Kumar, S., Physiological responses to weight lifting in different planes, Ergonomics, 23, 1980, pp.987-993.

Legg, S.J., and Myles, W.S., Metabolic and cardiovascular cost and perceived effort over an 8-hour day when lifting loads selected by the psychophysical method, Ergonomics, Vol.28, No.1, 1985, pp.337-343.

Mital, A., Maximum weights of lift acceptable to male and female industrial workers for extended work shifts, Ergonomics, Vol.27, No.11, 1984a, pp.1115-1126.

Snook, S.H., Irvine, C.H., and Bass, S.P., Weights and work loads acceptable to male industrial workers, American

