ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I must begin by expressing my warm gratitude to my guide, Professor S.L. Kudchedkar, former Head, Department of English, S.N.D.T. Women's University, for her invaluable guidance and constant encouragement. I sincerely appreciate her careful scrutiny of the manuscript of the thesis and her suggestions for its improvement.

I also owe a deep sense of gratitude to Professor R.L. Allwright, Department of Linguistics and Modern English Usage, University of Lancaster, U.K., for initiating me into Classroom Research and also for encouraging me to choose the research topic of this study. The discussions I had with him while I was engaged with the research were extremely helpful and illuminating.

I must thank The British Council for negotiating the arrangements of my stay, for ten days, on the campus of Lancaster University soon after I had completed a pilot project in April 1985.

I also owe sincere thanks to my friend, Mrs. Roz Ivanič and her family for their warm hospitality which enabled me to spend a fortnight in Lancaster in the Spring of 1988. My visits to Lancaster University during this period were very rewarding as it was possible to meet Professor Allwright and also to meet students of the University who were engaged in Classroom Research (Classroom Research Group). The discussions with this group clarified my ideas on various issues and helped me to continue my work with greater confidence. I owe many thanks to the students and teachers who participated in the discussion.

Special thanks are due to the teacher who taught the lessons, which constitute the data of this study, and permitted me to tape-record them and my interviews with her.

I am grateful to the students who were the subjects of the experiment, specially those who came for the interviews despite some inconvenience.

I owe many thanks to Dr (Mrs) G.B. Nagporewala, Vice Principal, S.N.D.T. College of Arts and Commerce for arranging the teaching sessions and to the Principal, Dr (Mrs) S.R. Shirgaonkar for making a suitable classroom available.

I warmly thank my brother, whose hospitality in May 1985 and 1988 enabled me to make use of the libraries of the Ontario Institute of Studies in Education, Toronto, and the Modern Language Centre, Toronto. I also thank him for making available to me material from various journals, whenever required.
To my husband I owe deep gratitude for his unfailing encouragement throughout the period I was engaged in this research. Despite a very busy schedule he kindly consented to go through some parts of the manuscript and offered valuable suggestions.

I have also to thank Mr Ramaiah, Librarian, C.I.E.F.L. Hyderabad for making available articles from various journals.

I thank Professor Suresh Dalai, Director, Department of Post Graduate Studies and Research, S.N.D.T. Women's University and Mrs Kamalini Bhansali, Vice Chancellor, S.N.D.T. Women's University for their co-operation at various stages of this research.

I shall be failing in gratitude if I do not gratefully acknowledge Mr B.G. Ubhare's meticulous typing of the manuscript. His patience, co-operation and cheerfulness have been a great support.

Finally, I am grateful to my M.Phil students, Sherry Pereira, Chinmai Gupta and Sangata Pol for sparing time to help me with last minute clerical work.
