ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In the course of a project of this kind, one inevitably becomes indebted to others in ways too numerous to mention and too personal to acknowledge in any but the most superficial manner. Nonetheless, I here wish to express my deep sense of gratitude to Prof. C. S. Chandram, Head, Department of Telugu, University of Madras who made available to me his wide knowledge of Comparative Literature, took paternal care in my welfare and provided me with the stimulus of astute and challenging criticism.

I also owe my gratitude to Prof. E. Mahabhar, Head, Department of English, University of Madras who never got tired of my numerous calls on him and was ever willing to provide me with his valuable guidance and help.

I also thank Prof. P. Anandam, Principal, Bharatmthi Rao Bahadur Calavala Cummam Chetty's Hindu College, Patta Mira, Madras 600 072 and the College Management who never failed to respond to my appeals for assistance and permitted me to register for Ph.D., and Vidwan T. Deenadayalu Naidu garu, former Head of the Department of Telugu of Dharmasurthi Rao Bahadur Galavala Cunanan Chetty's Hindu College, Tattakiras, Madras-600 072 who provided me with scholarly advice on various aspects of Telugu literature.

I also wish to thank all those who encouraged me and helped me in the completion of this thesis.
