ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Motivation for this study goes back to my involvement with the various groups of people in my Pastoral life. The sufferings of the subaltern peoples always challenged me to find a meaningful response. We see Jesus, as presented in the Gospels, especially in Luke, responding to the sufferings, in whomever he encountered and in whatever form he perceived. Suffering exists in many forms and in many ways. It is these elements that inspired me to undertake this study.

In this search, a number of people have helped me. Let me begin by thanking the subaltern peoples themselves for motivating me to undertake this study. I thank whole heartedly Prof. Dr. Thomas George, supervisor of the thesis, for his keen interest and ever welcoming encouragement. I am also grateful to the other staff and student members of the Department. My special indebtedness goes to Prof. Francis Pereira SJ, Scripture Professor, JDV, Pune for his constant guidance and for carefully going through the thesis and offering constructive observations. I also place on record the help that the Pontifical Biblical Institute, Rome, rendered to me during my one semester stay for research work at the institute.

My dialogue with various Scripture professors both in India and in Rome was of immense help. My access to various libraries of theological centres needs special mention. I also thank Arulkadal, Jesuit Theologate community, for their friendly support during my stay in Madras. My gratitude to my Andhra Jesuit Province for providing me this opportunity.
