ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This thesis is the outcome of focussed efforts of several persons. I am deeply indebted to Dr. A.P. Thomas, Former Director, School of Environmental Sciences (SES), Mahatma Gandhi University, who guided me in this research work. But for his persistence and patience I would not have been able to bring this study to any logical conclusion. I thank my co-guide Dr. Murali Vallabhan for his help and support. Dr. Christopher Research Co-ordinator, Advanced Centre for Environmental Science and Sustainable Development (ACESSD) also provided timely support in this work. Sreekanth N. P., research scholar at SES, was my ‘Man Friday’ in all technical aspects of organising and printing this thesis.

I am grateful to Prof. Dr. C. T. Aravindakumar, Director, SES and Dr. E.V. Ramasamy, Associate Professor, SES for their help and support. I thank the Muslim Educational Society, Calicut, my principal Dr. P.A. Fathima and former principal Prof. A.M. Rasheed, for granting me the opportunity to do this research work.

I had the support and help from numerous persons on my long treks in the forests and hills of Idukki in unfamiliar and tough terrains and difficult weather conditions for gathering information for this study. Tribal volunteers, Kanis of various hamlets, tribal healers, teachers of schools and Anganvadis in hamlets, health workers and the young and old in the Kudis have provided valuable inputs for this thesis. I thank Mr. Georgekutty P. A., of Edamalakudi Grama Panchayath Office for timely help provided to me.

I am grateful to Arun Babu V., Toms Augustine, Sreedharan K., Shylesh Chandran, Abdul Shukkur M. and all my fraternity at SES and at ACESSD, Mahatma Gandhi University for the innumerable sacrifices they have made on my behalf.

I thank University Grants Commission, New Delhi and Department of Higher Education, Kerala for granting me financial assistance under the Faculty Improvement Programme for carrying out this research work.

I thank my parents and family who have motivated me throughout this endeavour.

Above all I thank God Almighty for the blessings He showered on me.
