

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study owes a great deal to the indispensable and active assistance and encouragement from the Department of Gandhian Studies. The faculty and other staff most willingly and spontaneously extended all help for its completion, for which I am deeply indebted to them. I am eternally beholden to Prof. J.N. Sharma, the chairperson, Prof. M.L. Sharma and Dr. (Miss) Ashu Pasricha of the department who helped me in my research by sharing their views and experience all through.

The ideals are like stars, high up in the sky, we may not reach them but they guide our course on earth. Similarly, I owe a great deal to my Supervisor, Prof. (Mrs.) Rashmi Sudha Puri, who has guided me on each step. She allowed me full benefit of her experience and expertise and knowledge: her spontaneous, unreserved and unlimited support provided me the necessary motivation and direction during the course of the study. I owe a deep debt of gratitude to her for being extremely generous with her time and for creating in me the confidence and zeal for pursuing this research work.

I also gratefully acknowledge the help extended to me by the staff of A.C. Joshi Library, Panjab University, Gandhi Bhawan, and the Department of Political Science, Ambedkar Bhawan, Lajpat Rai Library, British Library, T.S. Central State Library in Chandigarh, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi and Sahitya Academy, New Delhi.

To my family members, especially my Father, Shri Sudarsan Kumar, my Mother, Smt. Ranbir Rani, Sisters, Amandeep and Kanchan, I owe an encompassing debt for their overall support, affection and encouragement. My husband, Rajesh, deserves a special word of thanks for his keen understanding; sense of adjustment, sharing of responsibilities and for providing me much needed relaxing moments. But for him, I would never have been able to cope with this extensive work.
Blessings are also due to Anjali, my daughter, for keeping the house peaceful and entertaining by her chitchat in various ways.

I am grateful to the colleagues of my department for their constructive, well-informed and lively discussions, which immensely benefited me.
