ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is with a tremendous sense of gratitude and appreciation that I recall the services rendered to me by numerous friends, well-wishers, colleagues, scholars and professors in the process of my completing successfully my Ph.D. thesis. The journey has been at once challenging and fulfilling, exhausting and enriching. However the role that these persons played all through the process has been nourishing and sustaining me.

I owe my debt of gratitude first and foremost and in an abundant measure to Dr. P. Marudanayagam, Ph.D. Professor and Head of the Department of English, Pondicherry University, who guided my research with critical interest, scholarly insight, friendly concern and above all, with a perfectionist's eye for the correctness of language, aptness and appropriateness of style and format of the thesis, and the overall evolution of thought and the impact of theme. I remember with a deep sense of gratitude the long hours he has spent with me, discussing the different aspects of the thesis, clarifying, criticising, elucidating and eliciting. It has been an extremely enriching experience relating to him as my mentor teacher and friend. He has introduced me, by his example and teaching, to fascinating and hitherto unchartered areas of research and investigation, specially to the infinite research potential that is there in the domain of Commonwealth Literature and that of Comparative Literature.

My sincere thanks are also due to my Professors in the faculty of English of Pondicherry University. Their positive approach to me and their timely suggestions and ideas have sustained my research fervour.
I express my deep sense of thankfulness to a host of my Jesuit friends who were a constant source of encouragement and support: Fr. Xavier Alphonse, S.J. who was instrumental in my conceiving and relentlessly pursuing the topic that lent itself for fruitful research; Fr. G. Packiaraj, S.J. who has all through rendered help by way of offering suggestions, comparing notes and above all, by providing a stimulating companionship; and my religious Superiors and fellow Jesuits who have given me the necessary support and encouragement.

I place on record my sense of gratitude to Dr. C.D. Narasimhaiah, for his rare insights and views, and his monumental collection of works on Commonwealth Literature in his Dhvanya Loka Library at Mysore. The American Studies Research Centre, Hyderabad, the Central Institute of English, Hyderabad, the Central Library, Pondicherry University, the library of the Department of English, American College, Madurai, the library of the Regional Institute of English, Bangalore and the libraries of St. Joseph’s College (Autonomous), Tiruchirappalli and Loyola College, Madras have been the resource centres I have visited and benefited from.

I remain grateful to the Pondicherry University and particularly to the English Department for kindly allowing me to do research. My special thanks are due to Rev. Sax, S.J. who from Nigeria generously supplied me with primary and secondary source materials on Chinua Achebe.

Finally let me thank Mr. Charles and Mr. Esther for the excellent typing of the thesis and Prof. Amirthan, M.Phil. of the Department of English of St. Joseph’s College, Tiruchirappalli for his meticulous reading of the rough draft of the thesis and his suggested corrections and alterations.
