I am very much thankful to Vybhav, Manasa, Eshu, Amith, Nidhi, Manya, and Mansi for the affection and love.

And here is the one who shared my tears and smiles. I thank him for inspiring suggestions, motivation, love and affection, and for helping me in all the endeavours. I have nothing to pay in return, except candid promise of living together for life. This comes as a royal greeting to you my dear husband Harish.

I feel sorry for being absent and unavailable to you in times of difficulty as well as joy, for too long. I convey my love to My Dear son Dev (chiru).

Writing this most difficult but non-taxing chapter is a soulful acknowledgement of gratitude towards people who stood to extend their helping hands in various ways during my academic life and especially during this study. While few names are being mentioned many more are missing, but I hope those names shall be read between the lines, I owe deep seated gratitude to all these missing names.
