ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I feel deeply indebted and grateful to Dr. Mrs. K.P. Singh, Professor, Department of Sociology, under whose able and prompt guidance and inspiration alone, this work could be completed. My interest in the field of Demography is a token of her insight and ideas which she shared with me during the period of my association with this Department both as a student and as a teacher fellow.

I owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. D'Souza (Retd.) Professor and Head of the Department of Sociology, but for whose timely support, I would not have availed of the opportunity of these advanced studies.

I am also thankful to Mr. Pimpley, Professor of the Department of Sociology, for his valuable suggestions and guidance in the statistical treatment of data.

I shall be failing in my duty if I do not express my deep sense of gratitude towards my husband who led me to the threshold where I am standing today and without whose sincere and selfless help and moral support I would not have ventured to take up this assignment and have completed it.

The silent sufferers during the period of my involvement with this work were my children - Shyam, Nishi, and Siddharth whom I have always been denying their due share of attention due to my pre-occupation with this work. My deepest sense of gratefulness rightfully stands for them too.

My thanks are also due to Mr. Bajaj for taking so much pains in typing this Dissertation.

Last, but not the least, I must thank my respondents for their prompt and active co-operation during my field work.
