PREFACE

Ours is a permissive society, there is still a lot of stigma about the psychiatric and psychological treatment. Most of the people consciously do not admit that they need psychiatric help and those who are brought to the psychiatric wards after a serious trouble, are not able to furnish proper information in a short time because of inadequate rapport with the attending clinician.

The researcher was looking for some Diagnostic Criterion which could overcome this problem. It was in March 1971 when Dr. Doseshe gave an idea about the 'D' Test where the subject is not asked about his personal life, rather the informations about his problems is collected through the drawings which he is asked to make in various 'D' Test blanks.

After the careful consideration, it was decided to standardise the 'D' Test as a psycho-diagnostic tool for various types of psychoneuromes.
