ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

To undertake research on a topic which primarily involves a field work is a risky endeavour as the collection of material, facts and figures depends on the courtesy and cooperation of many individuals and institutions. This study, therefore, owes much to the generosity of a number of colleagues and well-wishers but for whose active help, encouragement and inspiration, this effort, mostly single-handed as it was, would have gone waste.

I wish to express my deep sense of gratitude and indebtedness to Principal P.L. Anand, for his illuminating guidance and supervision with exceptional kindness and brilliance throughout the preparation of this work. His erudite scholarship, clear thinking, resourcefulness coupled with decades of experience as an administrator in the field of education helped me immensely in grasping some of the most complicated issues involved in this study. Prof. V.K. Tanjaya, Hallroyd Tydeman Scholar, Professor of Education, Punjab University, had been a perennial source of encouragement and guidance and but for his patronage and interest at all stages of this study, the present work would not have been undertaken. My most sincere thanks and deep regards to him.
Mr. B. S. Naruia, Professor of Administrative Theory and Behaviour, Indian Institute of Public Administration, New Delhi, has always been considerate and unfailingly serves as a 'family guide' or a beacon of light for whatever research is done by me and by my husband. Discussions with him on the importance of administrative leadership and other concepts of organisation have considerably stimulated and sharpened my own thinking on the subject. Principal Harnam Singh had been too generous in accommodating me in more than one way and it may be difficult to repay his generosity. I am specially thankful to Dr. C.L. Sapra and Dr. R.P. Singh of the National Council of Educational Research and Training, New Delhi, for providing some latest thinking on the subject and also for furnishing useful unpublished material. As regards statistical analysis, I have too often disturbed and bothered Dr. S.P. Aggarwal, Head of the Statistical Division, Institute of Manpower Planning and Research and Dr. P.V. Rao, Senior Statistician, Centre for Municipal Administration and Training. Some of the doubts were also got cleared from Dr. Kamkrishan Mukerji, Acting Director of the Indian Statistical Institute, Calcutta, and Mr. U. Pandey, Research Officer, Centre for the Study of Developing Societies, particularly regarding methodology.

As regards officers and other staff, so many officials have helped me in so many ways while writing this thesis that were I to mention all by names, it should seem tedious—some only ungracious. I shall, therefore, mention none, but express my most sincere thanks to all collectively.
especially to those who extended their readiness and courtesy with unstinted cooperation in answering questions often somewhat remote from their immediate preoccupations. I also express my thanks to the Librarians of National Council of Educational Research and Training, Asian Institute of Educational Planning and Administration, Indian Council of World Affairs, Institute of Education, Indian Council of Social Science Research, Punjab University, Punjab University Evening College, Chandigarh, and Punjab Civil Secretariat for their kind and cooperative attitude. I must single out Mr. K.S. Sharma, Indian Institute of Public Administration for checking the entries in the footnotes and the bibliography and Mr. O.P. Uppta, Punjab University Evening College, Chandigarh for checking the Tables and Appendices.

A lot of work has been done, however, and done with excellence and unfailing good spirit by my husband who richly deserves a share of whatever pleasure and satisfaction attend the completion of the work. However, in undertaking this study, no financial assistance could be secured from any quarter with the result that the meagre resources available to the researcher were not only stretched but thoroughly exhausted and the completion of the work is the only compensation.

Needless to say that whereas the knowledge and guidance of all these greatmen should have greatly enriched and improved the quality of research, the shortcomings which may have crept in are all due to my intellectual limitations.
