ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to express my deep gratitude to my guide and supervisor, Professor, J.N. Joshi, for the opportunity he provided me to work under him as a teacher fellow. He has been a constant source of inspiration and encouragement to me and this alone has made it possible to complete this work.

I am indebted to Dr. (Miss) Sudesh Gakhar, Reader, Department of Education, for her constant advice, analytical contribution and moral support.

I heartily thank:

Professor Prayag Mehta for sparing his valuable time to discuss with me many issues that have been raised in this thesis and also by providing me with his latest publications in this field; Mr. J.M. Jerath for sharing his valuable experience and thoughts; Professor K.B. Madsen of Royal Danish School of Educational Studies, Copenhagen, for providing valuable reprints, and sparing time for discussion during my visit to the institute; Professor D.L. Jayasuriya of the University of Western Australia for permitting me to consult his doctoral thesis and research work in the London University Library; Mr. B.B. Singh, Vice President, Danish-Indo-Society, Copenhagen, for hosting my stay in Denmark and for arranging my discussions; Mr. M. Malhotra, Director International Affairs, Commonwealth Secretariat, for enabling me to obtain published work from London University Library and other sources;
Mr. C.M. Bahl of Computer Centre, Panjab University, Mr. Bansal of Computer Centre, Delhi University, and Maj. Nandrajog and Col. Bains of Regional Computer Centre, Chandigarh, for the valuable assistance in the computation work in connection with the thesis.

I am also earnestly thankful to the teachers and students of Panjab University for giving me full co-operation in data collection; and to Prof. J.S. Sharma and members of the Panjab University Library Staff for all the help provided.

The place of the closest ones, who helped me with inexhaustible degree of patience and forbearance, remains in my heart.

This work would not have been initiated but for the award of a fellowship by the University Grants Commission, and the permission granted by the Punjab Government and Union Territory of Chandigarh.

I wish to express my sincere gratitude to Mr. J.L. Bajaj who typed and retyped the manuscript so painstakingly.

Tejinder Kaur.
