ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work is an outcome of my long involvement in teaching and research activities; strong inspiration ushered to me by my teachers, colleagues, friends and family; intense urge inside me for enhancing knowledge; and motherly affection and cooperation of my supervisor Prof. Meenakshi Malhotra.

The completion of this work leaves me indebted to many persons. First and foremost, I would like to offer my profound gratitude to my respected supervisor Prof. Meenakshi Malhotra, who, despite her busy schedule, gave time to supervise my work and guidance.

Tribhuvan University deserves special acknowledgement for its assistance extended to me to pursue doctoral research under the Faculty Development Programme.

I owe special debts to Prof. S.P. Singh, Prof. R.P. Gupta, Prof. B.B. Tandon, Prof. P.P. Arya and Prof. K.K. Mangla, University Business School, Panjab University for countless favours extended to me.

I would like to express my sincere gratitude to Dr. Sunity Shrestha, associate professor at the Central Department of Management, Tribhuvan University, Nepal, for her help in statistical aspect of the project.
My father Mr. Ram Krishna Shrestha, who is a constant source of inspiration despite his old age, and my brother Dr. Shree Krishna Shrestha who supported me in all the ways, deserve my respect and gratitude.

My friend Mr. Maneesh Arora deserves thanks for his warm companion during my stay at Chandigarh.

I would like to acknowledge the help of many persons during my field visits at different organizations.

My wife, Anjali, deserves profound thanks for playing sheet-anchor role and perennial source of inspiration. No less degree of credit goes to my kids, Swastika and Atul, who endured my absence and let me feel free.

Finally, I would like to thank Mr. Manohar Kandel for his painstaking in typing this research project.

Bal Krishna Shrestha