PREFACE

Preface writing is not only the last part of one's academic exercise but also the best part left for the author's inclination to express his debt of gratitude to all those who have most willingly helped in the preparation of his work.

In the preparation of this thesis I am greatly indebted to Dr. K. Venkatagiri Gowda, Professor and Head of the Department of Economics (Retd.) Bangalore University, Bangalore who has been a source of inspiration to me in my academic career. It was my long association with him both as a pupil and as a colleague in the Department of Economics for the last 19 years that helped to develop my thinking incisively and to formulate my thoughts along the lines now recorded in this doctoral thesis. He was kind and gracious enough to accept me as a Ph.D. candidate and to guide me with his rich knowledge to steer through my research. He was very generous in spareing my services from the Faculty of Economics and to make it doubly possible to pursue my doctoral study under the Faculty Improvement Programme, a facility which was extended by the Bangalore University.

My thanks are also due to my colleague Mr. R. Veerachamy who helped me in the task of collating and processing the statistical data and in building the mathematical model. My thanks are also due to Mr. Raja Rao, Deputy Director, Bureau of Economics and Statistics, Government of Karnataka, for his kindly allowing me access to the statistical material in the Directorate and required for the empirical part of the thesis.
