ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I owe a deep debt of gratitude to Professor C.A. Perumal, Emeritus Professor, Department of Politics and Public Administration, University of Madras, for supervising the research work and for providing constant encouragement and guidance at various stages. But for his constant inspiration and sustained interest this thesis would not have been written. My sincere thanks are due to Dr. R. Balasubramaniam, Head In-charge, Department of Politics and Public Administration, who has encouraged me during my research. I am also indebted to the Faculty of Politics and Public Administration and to the Faculty of Centre For Anna Studies, University of Madras for helping me in various ways in the progress of research.

I wish to thank the authorities of the Madras University Library, Maraimalaiadigal Library, U.V.S. Iyer Library, Indian Express Library and to Archaeological Survey of India.
I am grateful to several of the Saivites who had wished to remain incognito, for their valuable information on Nayanmars.

I would like to express my sense of gratitude to my parents, relatives and friends to their encouragement and benedictions.

I am beholden to the Tamil Nadu Academy of Political Science and the University of Madras for the grant of the Professor C.A. Perumal Research Fellowship which enabled me to complete the research on time.
