ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

At the completion of my doctoral thesis I am reminded of the powerful lines by Aristotle, "We are what we repeatedly do. Excellence, then, is not an act, but a habit". I have tried to imbibe this spirit of excellence from two people whom I hold in high esteem. The first person is my supervisor, Dr. Suman Verma, Head, Department of Child Development, Government Home Science College, Chandigarh who has always provided me with an ideal balance of independence and interdependence to carry out my research work. I thank her for having faith in me and for constantly guiding me towards my professional and personal growth.

The second person is Prof. Reed Larson, Department of Human and Community Development, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, USA. His long-standing experience in the field of single parent families, his patience and eye for detail, his constant encouragement to me to put in my best, and his much respected professional reputation are qualities that have inspired me throughout my research.

I am also thankful to Dr. Usha Dhawal, Principal, Government Home Science College, Chandigarh for her co-operation as and when required and to the College Research Committee for constructive suggestions during the planning stage of the project.

A special thanks to the Johann Jacobs Foundation, Switzerland for awarding me with the pre-doctoral fellowship for carrying out my research work and to the United States Educational Foundation in India (USEFI) for awarding me with the Fulbright Junior Research Fellowship that enabled me to carry out a part of my research in the United States at the University of Illinois under the able guidance of Prof. Reed Larson. The enriching experiences that I had in America have been possible because of the efforts of both these organizations.

The co-operation and help extended by subjects of the present study (adolescents and their single mothers) reinforces my faith in the goodness of human beings. I thank them for allowing me to share and pen down their experiences and also for teaching me personal lessons in coping and resilience.
I thank Gina and Natasha, my soul sisters, for being there with me and for me, during all times. I also thank Bela for being such a supportive friend.

I will always remember with great fondness my period of doctoral dissertation because it is through this thesis that I have made some enriching friendships that will continue as a life long bond. Ruchi, Sean, Rhonda (at the University of Illinois) Sarina, Lakshmi, Kamal ji, and Sukhminder are people whom I first knew professionally and who have now become dear friends.

I thank Arvinder for being so involved with my work and for helping me through all stages of my thesis, and most importantly for being a good friend. I am also thankful to Priyanka for her constant support and willingness to provide help, whenever required. I look forward to an enriching friendship with both of them. I am also thankful to Anupama, Anuradha, and Sujatha Mankotia, my spiritual friends and supporters.

Vibha, Inderpreet, Gaganpreet, Vasudha, and Miksha added on to the quality of data collection by assisting in conducting exhaustive interviews with the families. I thank them for their support. I also thank the staff at UNIVAC, especially Mr. Ravi Sharma, for providing such a continued congenial and friendly environment to carry out the formatting of my successive drafts.

My core is my family. They have been my pillars on whom I have always leant during happy times and trying times. A special word of thanks to my cousin Jyoti Kamal, who is both a brother and a friend and has helped me through various stages of my thesis.

This one is for my father, mother, sister and brother-in-law. You all have made it possible. Five words that describe your presence in my life: Thank you and Thank God.

June, 2003

Deepali Sharma