ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The researcher, at the outset, expresses her deep reverence and gratitude to her guide and supervisor, Prof. K Ganesan, M.A. Ph.D., Principal and Head of the Department of Economics, Ramakrishna Mission Vivekananda College, Madras, for his timely and generous acceptance to guide the scholar. Dr. Ganesan's insistence, right from start to finish, on qualitative theoretical rigour and on analytical exposition of ideas, duly related to the hypothesis, besides the several useful discussion held with him, have been a rich and rewarding experience to the researcher. It would be no exaggeration to state that but for Dr. Ganesan's constant encouragement, unstinted support and invaluable guidance, this thesis would not have seen the light of the day.

The researcher is also thankful to the authorities of the Ramakrishna Mission Vivekananda College, Madras for admitting the researcher in their esteemed institution for the Ph.D. programme.

To the representatives of the Automotive Industry, especially the firms chosen for the case study, the researcher expresses her sincere thanks for their generous co-operation, which had enabled her to obtain a deep insight into the area of inquiry. Despite their preoccupation, they had spared their valuable time for discussion and had also given much of the information required. The researcher's inability to acknowledge each of them individually in no way minimises the importance of their assistance.

The researcher is grateful to Mr. S. Venkatakrishnan and Ms S Kasturi of M/s. Dynamic Processors, Madras and their staff, Mr N Venkatasubramaniam and Mr J Srinivasan for their timely help in typing several drafts besides getting the final thesis ready on record time. The immense care they had bestowed at each stage and their unfailing support had been invaluable to the researcher.

The researcher is very much indebted to all the members of her family, who had provided support and the much needed encouragement which enabled her to finish the thesis against great odds.

Last but not the least, the researcher expresses her profound thanks to the Government of India, for having granted her the study leave, and thereby encouraged her to undertake this research work.
