ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A host of individuals and institutions have contributed to this thesis. At the outset, I would like to thank DR. D. JAYALAKSHMI, Professor and Head, Department of Sociology, University of Madras, for her guidance and encouragement. Her supervision has been crucial at all times.

Among individuals, Ram sir provided both inspiration and intermittent clarification. Any shortcoming in this enterprise is for no fault of his. This thesis has benefited immensely from the advice of Professor Heidemann, Professor Nurit and Professor Nygren.

On the non-academic front the following individuals need special mention. I owe my gratitude to the Venugopals in Madras, and Rajanna in Gudalur for playing gracious hosts. Amma, Appa and Chief have been a wonderful family to be part of. Friends, in Ooty and Madras, have been of great emotional help during the course of this thesis.

Among institutions, the Forest and Revenue department Headquarters in Chennai, and their divisions in Ooty and Gudalur have rendered more assistance than any scholar could have asked for.
