ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

When I commenced work on Seamus Heaney’s poetry as partial fulfilment of the M.Phil programme, my supervisor, Professor and Head, Department of English, Dr. M.S. Nagarajan, despite the potential hazards of the venture, placed his faith squarely in me. That faith and, addedly, his mature guidance have sustained me till date. He has represented, for me, a benign paternal intercession in my academic life, gently psyching me into attaining my goals. I am profoundly indebted to him for the lessons he taught me in scholarship, and in the broad spectrum of values.

The other members of the faculty in the Department have been on several occasions warmly encouraging and solicitous. I have enjoyed interacting with them during discussions, academic and otherwise. To Dr. C.T. Indra, Dr. N. Eakambaram and Dr. V. Saraswathi I owe a great deal for their moral support. As for Dr. S. Jagadisan, his appreciation has been assuaging and his criticism, invaluable. I thank him for having set aside precious time to comment upon my work. And to the non-teaching personnel Mr. Thirumavalavan and Mr. Kothandapani, I am grateful for keeping the machinery of my Ph.d. programme well-oiled.

I acknowledge with gratitude and affection the fundamental fillip given to my sense of academic self-worth by Dr. Seetha Srinivasan, Professor and Head, Department of English, Stella Maris College, Madras.

My thanks are due to the Librarian and Staff at the British Council Library Madras, the ASRC and CIEFL Libraries, Hyderabad, for their assistance; to the Manager Mr. K. Nagarajan, and Typing Assistant Ms. L. Senbagavalli, Student’s Xerox, Adyar, for their personalised service and professional expertise; specially, to my father V.C.S.Desikan who manfully performed the task of typing out my incongribly illegible manuscript; to my good friend, Geetha Raghuraman, for her painstaking proof-reading effort.

My brother V.C.Gopalratnam, an environmental engineer at Cincinnati, has over the past six years possibly acquainted himself better than I have with the bibliographical checklist on Heaney. So meticulously has he culled obscure references.
In the context of the very real constraints I faced regarding availability of sources, his help has been immeasurable. I thank him for being there, for me!

And lastly, my family here in Madras - I am grateful to them for letting me occupy, for a spell, an insular, self-inclosed space, quite alien to them. My husband S.Vasudevan, I acknowledge for his constant, loving, liberal support and his reliable critical response to my work; my parents and my parents-in-law for their congenial wisdom and understanding; and most of all, my children Nitya and Murari for their touching, unquestioning love and adaptability.
