PREFACE

We have undertaken to make a research on the proofs for the existence of God not because they have not been studied sufficiently so far but with a view to evaluate them in the light of Saiva Siddhānta teaching. This evaluation has eventually led us to make an emphasis on the argument from the personal experience of God. This is precisely the contribution of our thesis. We consider this as a humble attempt towards a new way of reflecting on the problem of God.

The author feels extremely grateful to Dr V. Kithinasabapathy, Dr S. Madhakrishnan Institute for Advanced Study in Philosophy, University of Madras, who by his critical intellect and practical wisdom guided the author in all phases of this thesis. But for his invaluable suggestions and encouragement, this thesis would not have materialised. For all the love, sympathy and patience, the author could do no better than to offer his humble prostrations.

The author wishes to record his profound gratitude to Dr K. Balamurugan, Director, Dr S. Madhakrishnan Institute for Advanced Study in Philosophy, University of Madras, for his consistent support and encouragement.

Also, the author is greatly indebted to Dr P. K. Sundaram, and other faculty members of the Centre for their advice and encouragement.
The author owes a special debt of gratitude to the University Grants Commission and the University of Madras for their award of Teacher Fellowship under the Faculty Improvement Programme to pursue this research.

The author also expresses his gratitude to the Director of Collegiate Education, Madras, and to the Principal, Poompuhar Peravai Kalloori, Melaiyur for giving him lien in order to pursue this work.

Finally, the author is thankful to the University authorities for providing the facilities for this research work.
