ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I am extremely fortunate to have received the guidance and help from several persons at various phases of my research work. First and foremost, I thank my research guide, Dr. Sayed Afzal Peerzade, Head, Department of Economics, Karnataka State Women’s University, Bijapur. His academic guidance, insistence on developing conceptual clarity, sharpness in communication and ability to relate issues have proved invaluable. Besides, he has widened my perspective and broadened my vision.

I extend my earnest thanks to Dr. D.M. Madari and Dr. R.V. Gangashetti, Department of Economics, Karnataka State Women’s University, Bijapur for their support and cooperation. I offer my sincere thanks to Dr. S.A. Kazi, Dean of Social Science, Karnataka State Women’s University, Bijapur for his valuable suggestions at the time of pre-submission presentation. I am equally grateful to Dr. M.B. Dishad, Dr. Sunadamma of Karnataka State Women’s University, Bijapur.

My special thanks are due to my brother Dr. Satish Kanamadi, Dy. Librarian, TISS, Mumbai. His help in conceptulising the topic, formulating the questionnaire and organising the thesis is remembered with a deep sense of gratitude.

I am greatly indebted to Dr. C.R. Karisiddappa, Professor Emeritus, Department of Library and Information Science, Karnataka University, Dharwad, for his parental advice. Words can not express the feelings of thankfulness and respect that I have for members of Kadadevearmath family, Dharwad, Dr. S.B. Nagur and family, Smt. Annapurna Kanamadi, Smt. Gangabai Kanamadi and family for their moral encouragement. I remember Late Prof. I.N. Simpi with gratitude, whose teaching ignited thirst in the field of Economics within me. I am also thankful to Late Sri. P.H. Nalawade for always being my inspiration.

I profusely thank my respondents for their cooperation in providing me with accurate data. Thanks are also due to the Librarians and staff of Tata Institute of Social Science, Mumbai and Karnataka State Women’s University, Bijapur.
Further, I am obliged to Dr. N. B. Hosamani, Principal, Government First Grade College, Muddeibhal, my colleagues and students, for their academic support.

I owe my heartfelt thanks to my father Sri. P. S. Kanamadi and my mother Mrs. Kasturi who provided the encouragement to pursue a doctorate course work, helped me to the fullest extent and patiently bore with me till its completion. Without their support and blessings my work would not have seen day’s light. I am extremely fortunate to have received moral support and continuous guidance during every step of my research work from my sister Dr. Vidya Hanchinal and brother-in-law Dr. Veeresh Hanchinal. I heartily thank my brother Mahantesh for providing moral strength during the thick and thin. I am more thankful than I am able to express to my nephew Abhidnya for his unconditional love and support.

I am grateful to all my family members and friends, who directly and indirectly encouraged and supported me.

Above all, I bow my head before God, the Almighty, for His Endless Blessings.
